Conclusion

The sources of medieval Indian history encompass a wide range of literary, archaeological, numismatic, epigraphic, and foreign accounts. Each category of sources offers unique perspectives and valuable information, collectively providing a comprehensive understanding of the political, social, economic, and cultural dimensions of medieval India. These diverse sources help historians reconstruct the multifaceted history of this period, highlighting the complexity and richness of India's medieval past.

The establishment of the Delhi Sultanate was a significant event in Indian history, marking the beginning of Muslim rule in northern India. The causes for its establishment can be attributed to a combination of political, military, and social factors. Here is an overview of the key causes:

1. Decline of the Rajput Kingdoms

1. Fragmentation and Weakness:

- The Rajput kingdoms were divided and engaged in frequent conflicts with each other. This internal fragmentation made them vulnerable to external invasions.

- Lack of a unified front and coherent strategy weakened their ability to resist the invading forces effectively.
- 2. Defensive Military Strategies:
 - Rajput military strategies and tactics were primarily defensive, focused on protecting individual forts and territories rather than mounting coordinated counter-offensives.

2. Military Campaigns and Leadership of Muhammad Ghori

1. Ambitious Expansion:
 - Muhammad Ghori, a ruler from the Ghurid dynasty, was ambitious and aimed to expand his empire into the Indian subcontinent.
 - His military campaigns in the late 12th century were characterized by strategic planning and execution.
2. Key Battles:
 - First Battle of Tarain (1191): Initially, Prithviraj Chauhan defeated Muhammad Ghori. However, Ghori managed to retreat, regroup, and return with a stronger force.
 - Second Battle of Tarain (1192): Muhammad Ghori decisively defeated Prithviraj Chauhan, opening the path for further conquests in northern India.

3. Superior Military Tactics and Technology

1. Effective Use of Cavalry:
 - The Ghurid forces utilized highly mobile cavalry units, which were more effective in the open plains of northern India compared to the traditional Rajput infantry and elephant corps.
 - The use of mounted archers and horsemen provided a tactical advantage.
2. Innovative Warfare Techniques:
 - The invaders employed innovative tactics such as rapid mobility, coordinated assaults, and psychological warfare, which overwhelmed the Rajput defenders.

4. Political Instability and Fragmentation in Northern India

1. Decay of Established Empires:
 - The decline of the Gurjara-Pratihara Empire and the weakening of other regional powers like the Palas and Rashtrakutas created a power vacuum in northern India.
 - This political instability provided an opportunity for external forces to establish control.
2. Local Alliances and Rivalries:
 - The Ghurid invaders skillfully exploited local rivalries and formed alliances with discontented factions, which facilitated their conquests.

5. Establishment of Slave Generals and Administrative Reforms

1. Role of Slave Generals:
 - Muhammad Ghori appointed capable slave generals like Qutb-ud-din Aibak to govern and consolidate his conquests.
 - These generals were loyal, efficient, and played crucial roles in establishing and stabilizing Ghurid rule in India.
2. Administrative Reforms:
 - The introduction of centralized administrative systems helped in effectively managing newly conquered territories.
 - Efficient revenue collection, land management, and judicial systems facilitated the consolidation of power.

6. Legacy of Muhammad Ghori and Qutb-ud-din Aibak

1. Death of Muhammad Ghori:

- After Muhammad Ghori's assassination in 1206, his Indian territories came under the control of his slave general, Qutb-ud-din Aibak.
- Aibak declared independence and established the Mamluk Dynasty, marking the formal beginning of the Delhi Sultanate.

2. Founding of the Delhi Sultanate:

- Qutb-ud-din Aibak established his capital at Delhi, strategically located to control northern India.
- The establishment of the Delhi Sultanate marked the beginning of nearly three centuries of Muslim rule in northern India, characterized by subsequent dynasties like the Khaljis, Tughlaqs, Sayyids, and Lodis.

Conclusion

The establishment of the Delhi Sultanate was the result of a combination of internal weaknesses among Indian kingdoms, effective military strategies of the Ghurid invaders, and the administrative acumen of leaders like Qutb-ud-din Aibak. This period marked significant political, social, and cultural changes in the Indian subcontinent, setting the stage for future developments in Indian history.

The Slave Dynasty, also known as the Mamluk Dynasty, was the first Muslim dynasty to rule Delhi and parts of northern India. Founded by Qutb-ud-din Aibak, a former slave of Muhammad Ghori, the dynasty lasted from 1206 to 1290. Here are the key kings of the Slave Dynasty and their contributions to kingship:

1. Qutb-ud-din Aibak (1206-1210)

Qutb-ud-din Aibak was a prominent ruler during the medieval period in India and the founder of the Slave Dynasty, also known as the Mamluk Dynasty. Here's an overview of his reign and contributions:

Reign (1206-1210):

1. Establishment of the Delhi Sultanate:

- Qutb-ud-din Aibak declared himself the ruler of Delhi in 1206 after the death of his master and patron, Muhammad Ghori.
- His ascension marked the beginning of the Delhi Sultanate, which became a prominent Muslim kingdom in northern India.

2. Consolidation of Power:

- Aibak faced initial challenges from rival claimants to power and internal dissent within his administration.
- He swiftly suppressed revolts and consolidated his authority over Delhi and surrounding regions.

3. Administrative Reforms:

- Aibak introduced administrative reforms to strengthen governance and maintain law and order.
- He established a network of administrators and military commanders to govern the newly acquired territories.

4. Construction Projects:

- Aibak initiated several construction projects, including the construction of forts, mosques, and other public works.
 - Notably, he began the construction of the Qutub Minar in Delhi, which would later become a symbol of the Sultanate's power and architectural prowess.
5. Expansion of Territories:
- During his reign, Aibak expanded the territorial boundaries of the Delhi Sultanate through military conquests and strategic alliances.
 - He extended his rule into regions such as Rajasthan, Uttar Pradesh, and parts of Central India.
6. Military Campaigns:
- Aibak conducted military campaigns to subdue local rulers and establish control over their territories.
 - His military strategies focused on mobility, cavalry warfare, and swift conquests, which proved effective in expanding the Sultanate's influence.

Legacy:

- Qutb-ud-din Aibak's reign laid the foundation for the Delhi Sultanate and established Muslim rule in northern India.
- His administrative reforms and construction projects contributed to the Sultanate's stability and cultural development.
- Aibak's military campaigns and conquests set the stage for further expansion and consolidation under subsequent rulers of the Slave Dynasty.

Despite his relatively short reign, Qutb-ud-din Aibak's contributions had a lasting impact on the political, cultural, and architectural landscape of medieval India, shaping the course of Delhi Sultanate's history for centuries to come.

- Origins: Aibak was a slave of Muhammad Ghori who rose to prominence in the Delhi Sultanate.
- Kingship: After Ghori's death, Aibak declared himself the ruler of Delhi in 1206, founding the Slave Dynasty.
- Contributions: He established his capital in Delhi and initiated the construction of prominent landmarks like the Qutub Minar. His reign focused on consolidating power and expanding the Sultanate's territories.

2. Aram Shah (1210-1211)

- Successor: Aram Shah succeeded his father, Qutb-ud-din Aibak, but his reign was short-lived and marked by internal conflicts.
- Challenges: Aram Shah faced opposition from rival factions and commanders within the Sultanate, leading to his overthrow by Iltutmish.

3. Iltutmish (1211-1236)

Iltutmish was the first Muslim ruler to rule from Delhi and that's why he was regarded as the effective founder of the Delhi Sultanate. He was also the first Sultan of India to be recognised by the Khalifa. He was successful in protecting Delhi's throne from Mongol invasion as well as Yeldoos and Qubacha attacks. He shattered the Rajput powers in the north and established his dominance over them. He made his rule hereditary, issued coins in his honour, and made Delhi a beautiful capital. He was a patron of art and architecture and built numerous mosques in Delhi. In this article, we will discuss the Important Ruler of the Mamluk Dynasty Iltutmish (1211 - 1236 AD)

- Iltutmish was a slave of the Sultan of Delhi, Qutubuddin Aibek.
- His father was a high-ranking noble of the Turkish Ilbari tribe.
- He was eventually purchased at a phenomenal price by Qutubuddin Aibek in Delhi.
- Iltutmish received a good education and a broad knowledge of the Islamic world during the early days of his hardship.
- That is why, within a decade, he rose to become amir-e-shikar and son-in-law of his master.
- Soon, he became governor of the iqtas of Gwalior and Baran (Bulandshahar).
- In 1206, he was one of Aibek's most dependable lieutenants, commanding Badaun.
- The Turkish nobility of Delhi did not support Aram Shah's hereditary succession as he was an inept and unpopular ruler.
- They invited Iltutmish of Badaun to succeed them as Sultan.
- Aram Shah refused to abdicate but was defeated and dethroned in 1211 by Iltutmish.

Achievements and Expansion of Empire

Defeat of Yildiz

- Taj al-Din Yildiz, a former slave who claimed to be the rightful successor to the Ghurid emperor, ruled the Ghurid capital of Ghazni.
- Yildiz declared to Iltutmish that he was the true successor of Mu'izz ad-Din and thus had claims to the former Ghurid territories in India.
- Iltutmish offered to negotiate if both men arrived at the meeting unaccompanied by warriors.
- Yildiz refused the offer, resulting in a battle at Tarain on January 25, 1216, which Iltutmish won.
- Yildiz was later taken to Iltutmish's stronghold of Badaun and murdered.
- The success of Iltutmish in this conflict bolstered the Delhi Sultanate's independence.

Defeat of Qabacha

- Qabacha was another serious threat to Iltutmish rule.
- However, his power had been reduced by the simultaneous attacks of Yeldoos and Mangabarni.
- Taking the advantage of his situation, Iltutmish decided to launch an all-out assault on Qabacha
- He dispatched two armies, one from Lahore to attack Multan and the other from Delhi to invade Uch.
- During the capture of Uch, Qabacha sought refuge in the fort of Bhakkar, which was besieged by the Delhi Army.
- Finally, with no other options, he committed suicide by drowning in the Indus River. As a result, Sind and Multan were absorbed into the Delhi Sultanate's empire.

Annexation of Bihar and Bengal

- During the reign of Qutb-ud-din Aibak, province Bengal was under the authority of the Delhi Sultan.
- However, after the death of Aibak, Bengal declared independence.
- Iltutmish, on the other hand, was preoccupied with the western frontier provinces and had no time to devote to Bengal.

- Soon after the death of Qabacha, he considered invading Bengal and sent an expedition to Bengal.
- Sultan Ghiyasuddin was the ruler of Bengal at the time.
- Sultan Ghiyasuddin submitted without a fight, acknowledged Delhi's suzerainty, and agreed to pay the annual tribute.
- But, within a short time, Ghiyasuddin revolted once more and declared Bengal independent.
- Iltutmish sent another expedition and killed Sultan Ghiyasuddin and made Nasiruddin Mahmud as governor of Bengal.
- Following Nasiruddin's departure, there was another rebellion in Bengal led by Malik Balka Khalji.
- In 1230 AD, Iltutmish personally went to Bengal and killed Malik Balkha Khalji, and annexed Bengal to the Delhi Empire.

Other Conquests of Iltutmish

- Iltutmish re-annexed many states which declared independence after the death of Aibak such as Ranthambore, Gwalior, Ajmer, Bayana, Jalor, Mander Kalinjar, Thangir.
- In 1231 AD, Kanauj and Benaras were reoccupied.
- He annexed Malwa and Ujjain to his empire in 1239 A.D.
- As a result, Iltutmish expanded the Turkish empire in India to the size it was during Aibak's reign.

Architecture

Architecture During Iltutmish's Reign

- Iltutmish was a patron of art and architecture and built numerous mosques, waterworks and civic amenities in Delhi.
- He finished the Qutb Minar, which Qutb al-din Aibak had begun.
- He also built the Hauz-i-Shamsi reservoir south of Qutub Minar, as well as the madrasa (school) that surrounds it.
- He constructed several khanqah (monasteries) and dargahs (graveyards) for Sufi saints.
- He began construction on Hamid ud-din's Khanaqa and built the Gandhak ki Baoli, a stepwell for the Sufi saint Qutbuddin Bakhtiar Kaki, who moved to Delhi during his reign.
- In 1231, he erected the Sultan Ghari funerary monument in memory of his eldest son Nasiruddin, who died two years earlier

Death of Iltutmish

- As a result of continuous military operations, Iltutmish became ill in 1235 AD.
- During his last expedition against Bayana, he became ill and was immediately brought to Delhi for treatment.
- But he could not recover from such illness, and after a year of struggling with life, he breathed his last in 1236.
- He was laid to rest in Mehrauli's Qutub complex.
- With his death, the country lost a great ruler, and the long twenty-five-year glorious reign of the Delhi Sultanate came to an end.

Conclusion

Iltutmish established the Turks' absolute kingship in northern India. He was a military dictator similar to Aibek, but with the difference that all power was concentrated in his own hands. He personally appointed all central ministers and regional military governors. He forbade the Turkish nobility from interfering in state affairs beyond certain limits. He completed the Qutub Minar and rejoiced in his association with the sufi saints of the time. During his last expedition against Bayana, he became ill and after a year of struggle with life, he breathed his last in 1236.

- Origins: Iltutmish was a slave of Qutb-ud-din Aibak and rose to power after the overthrow of Aram Shah.
- Kingship: He strengthened the administrative structure of the Sultanate, introduced reforms, and successfully defended the realm against external threats.
- Achievements: Iltutmish's reign saw the formal establishment of the Delhi Sultanate as a significant political power in India.

4. Rukn-ud-din Firuz (1236)

- Successor: Rukn-ud-din Firuz, Iltutmish's eldest son, briefly ascended to the throne after his father's death but was assassinated within months.
- Short Reign: His reign was marked by instability and political intrigue, leading to his overthrow by his own mother, Shah Turkan.

5. Razia Sultan (1236-1240)

Introduction

Razia Sultan was the one of the strongest rulers of the entire Delhi sultanate. She was the first Muslim ruler who ruled the northern part of India. She is also the only Muslim woman who becomes ruler of the Delhi sultanate. She was born in 1205 at Badaun and died on 15 October 1240 at Kaithal, Delhi Sultanate. Her full name was, "Sultan Raziyat-Ud-Dunya Wa Ud-Din". Although her regional name was "Jalâlat-ud-Dîn Razia ." She was the fifth sultan of Delhi. She was the wife of Ikhtiyaruddin Altuna. She belonged to the Sunni Islam religion and was a brave lady in Indian history.

Razia Sultan was the daughter of Delhi sultan Mamluk Sultan Shamsuddin Iltutmish. The father of the Razia sultan had handed over the whole administration to her when he was engaged in the campaign of Gwalior. In this time, she maintained the whole administration from 1231–1232. When the father of the Razia sultan came back to Delhi, he was impressed with her work. Due to this, Iltutmish nominated the Razia sultan as an heir apparent of the Delhi sultanate. Iltutmish also has a younger brother named Ruknuddin Firoz Shah, and her mother, Shah Turkan, was very clever. Shah Turkan makes the Razia sultan the ruler of the Delhi sultanate. But, her brother Ruknuddin Firoz Shah neglected to accept her as a ruler. So, Razia Sultan planned a rebellion against her half-brother. Some of the Delhi sultanate officials supported her, while some opposed her. She defeated all her opposition and started building her power.

In April 1236, she became the ruler of the Delhi sultanate. After ruling for less than four years in Delhi, she was removed by Ruknuddin Firoz Shah. After that, she got married to Ikhtiaruddin Altuna. She again tried to defeat her half-brother, but Ruknuddin Firoz Shah and his successor Muizuddin Bahram killed her badly in October 1240.

Razia Sultan was a great women leader of the Delhi sultanate. The public of the Delhi sultanate called her a Raziyya and Raḍiyya. In the period when she ruled the Delhi sultanate, she launched her coin named Sultan Jalalat al-Duniya wal-Din.

Ascension of Razia sultan to the throne

The Mamluk Sultan Shamsuddin Iltutmish had declared his eldest son Nasiruddin Mahmud as the successor of his throne. But unexpectedly, Nasiruddin Mahmud died in the year 1229. Iltutmish, also considered his younger son Ruknuddin Firoz Shah, was addicted to pleasurable activities. Hence, he considered that his younger son could not handle the big empire. But, when he monitored the performance of the Razia sultan after coming from the campaign of Gwalior, he declared her as the next ruler of the Delhi sultanate. But many officials of the Delhi sultanate opposed the decision of Iltutmish. But he proved her daughter more capable in comparison to his sons. Some historians also consider that the Iltutmish accepted his younger brother as the next ruler in the last days of his life. Some consider that the Razia sultan does not rule the Delhi sultanate, and it was just a story told by her supporters. Many officials accept her as a ruler because of her capabilities, and some do not. Instead of various difficulties, she becomes the first Muslim woman of India who rules the Delhi sultanate. She died in 1240, and her burial was located in the Bulbul Khana near Turkman Gate, Delhi.

- Origins: Razia Sultan, the daughter of Iltutmish, became the first and only female ruler of the Delhi Sultanate.
- Kingship: She inherited the throne after the death of her brother Rukn-ud-din Firuz and ruled with determination and authority.
- Contributions: Razia Sultan implemented administrative reforms, promoted religious tolerance, and sought to strengthen the Sultanate's military capabilities.

6. Muiz-ud-din Bahram (1240-1242)

- Successor: Bahram, also known as Ala ud din Masud, succeeded Razia Sultan after her overthrow but faced challenges to his rule.

- Short Reign: His reign was marked by instability and revolts, leading to his eventual overthrow by the nobility.

Conclusion:

The kings of the Slave Dynasty played significant roles in shaping the early phase of Muslim rule in India. Their reigns were characterized by efforts to consolidate power, establish administrative structures, and defend the Sultanate against internal and external threats. While some rulers faced challenges and instability, others made lasting contributions to governance and kingship in medieval India.

The Khilji dynasty, also known as the Khalji dynasty, ruled over the Delhi Sultanate from 1290 to 1320. This period marked a significant chapter in medieval Indian history, characterized by both military expansion and administrative reforms. Here's an overview of the Khilji dynasty and its administration under notable rulers:

1. Jalal-ud-din Khalji (1290-1296):

Jalal-ud-din Khalji, the founder of the Khalji dynasty, ruled over the Delhi Sultanate from 1290 to 1296. His reign was characterized by efforts to stabilize the Sultanate after the turmoil following the decline of the preceding Slave Dynasty. Here's an exploration of Jalal-ud-din Khalji's origins, administration, and military campaigns:

Origins:

Jalal-ud-din Khalji's origins are traced to the Khalji tribe of Turkic descent. He was born in the town of Khalaja near the Ghor province in present-day Afghanistan. Before ascending the throne, Jalal-ud-din served as a prominent military commander under the previous Sultan, Muiz-ud-din Qaiqabad, of the Slave Dynasty. After Qaiqabad's death, Jalal-ud-din took advantage of the political instability and seized power, establishing the Khalji dynasty in 1290.

Administration:

Jalal-ud-din Khalji's administration focused on maintaining stability and consolidating power within the Sultanate. Some key aspects of his administration include:

1. Reconciliation Policies: Jalal-ud-din adopted a conciliatory approach towards the nobility and other power centers within the Sultanate. He sought to win the support of influential factions by granting them positions of authority and maintaining cordial relations with local rulers.
2. Religious Tolerance: He pursued a policy of religious tolerance, allowing non-Muslim communities to practice their faith freely. This approach helped in fostering social harmony and stability within the Sultanate.
3. Justice and Governance: Jalal-ud-din emphasized the importance of justice and good governance. He appointed competent officials to administer justice and oversee the affairs of the state. His administration aimed to ensure fairness and efficiency in the delivery of services to the people.

Military Campaigns:

Jalal-ud-din Khalji's military campaigns were primarily focused on consolidating his authority and defending the Sultanate against external threats. Some notable military campaigns during his reign include:

1. Defense against Mongol Invasions: Jalal-ud-din faced the threat of Mongol invasions from the northwest. He deployed his forces to repel Mongol incursions and safeguard the frontiers of the Sultanate. His efforts helped in preventing the Mongols from gaining a foothold in the region.
2. Border Conflicts: Jalal-ud-din dealt with border conflicts with neighboring kingdoms and regional powers. He conducted military campaigns to assert the Sultanate's authority over disputed territories and maintain control over strategic regions.
3. Pacification of Internal Revolts: Jalal-ud-din Khalji also had to suppress internal revolts and rebellions within the Sultanate. He deployed his forces to quell unrest and maintain law and order in various parts of the realm.

Conclusion:

Jalal-ud-din Khalji's reign as the first ruler of the Khalji dynasty was marked by efforts to stabilize the Sultanate and consolidate power. His administration focused on reconciliation, religious tolerance, and efficient governance. Despite facing challenges from external threats and internal unrest, Jalal-ud-din's military campaigns helped in defending the Sultanate and maintaining its territorial integrity during his brief reign.

- Origins: Jalal-ud-din Khalji ascended to the throne after overthrowing the last ruler of the Slave Dynasty, Muiz-ud-din Qaiqabad.
- Administration: He focused on consolidating power and maintaining stability within the Sultanate.
- Military Campaigns: Jalal-ud-din faced external threats from the Mongols and conducted military campaigns to defend the Sultanate's territories.
- Religious Tolerance: He was known for his policy of religious tolerance, which helped in maintaining harmony among diverse religious communities.

2. Alauddin Khalji (1296-1316):

Alauddin Khalji, one of the most powerful rulers of the Khalji dynasty, ascended the throne of the Delhi Sultanate in 1296 after a coup against his uncle, Jalal-ud-din Khalji. His reign, from 1296 to 1316, was marked by significant administrative reforms, military conquests, and economic policies aimed at centralizing power and expanding the Sultanate's territories. Here's an exploration of Alauddin Khalji's origins, administration, military campaigns, and wars:

Origins:

Alauddin Khalji was born into the Khalji tribe, a Turkic group of Central Asian origin. His father, Shihabuddin Mas'ud, was a prominent member of the Khalji clan. Alauddin rose to prominence as a military commander under his uncle Jalal-ud-din Khalji. After orchestrating a successful coup against Jalal-ud-din, Alauddin seized power and established himself as the Sultan of Delhi in 1296.

Administration:

Alauddin Khalji's administration was characterized by centralization of power, ruthless governance, and pragmatic policies. Some key features of his administration include:

1. Centralization of Authority: Alauddin centralized power in his own hands, weakening the influence of the nobility and other power centers within the Sultanate. He established a highly centralized administrative structure, with himself as the supreme authority.
2. Market Regulations: Alauddin implemented strict market regulations to control prices and prevent hoarding of essential commodities. His market reforms aimed to ensure adequate food supply for the capital and maintain stability in the economy.
3. Revenue Reforms: He introduced the Dahsala system, a revenue assessment system based on measurement of agricultural land and fixed taxation rates. This helped in increasing state revenue and strengthening the Sultanate's finances.
4. Military Organization: Alauddin reorganized the Sultanate's military, creating a standing army known as the Newiki. He recruited soldiers from diverse backgrounds and implemented strict discipline and training to maintain a formidable military force.

Military Campaigns:

Alauddin Khalji's military campaigns were aimed at expanding the territorial boundaries of the Delhi Sultanate and consolidating his authority. Some significant military campaigns during his reign include:

1. Conquests in North India: Alauddin launched military expeditions to conquer territories in North India, including Gujarat, Rajasthan, and parts of Uttar Pradesh. His conquests helped in expanding the Sultanate's influence and establishing control over strategic regions.
2. Deccan Campaigns: He conducted successful military campaigns in the Deccan region, capturing forts and territories in present-day Maharashtra, Karnataka, and Andhra Pradesh. His Deccan campaigns extended the Sultanate's control to southern India.
3. Defense against Mongol Invasions: Alauddin repelled Mongol invasions from the northwest, deploying his forces to defend the Sultanate's frontiers and prevent incursions into Indian territory.

Wars and Attacks:

Alauddin Khalji's reign was marked by several wars and military attacks, both offensive and defensive. Some notable conflicts include:

1. Siege of Chittor (1303): Alauddin launched a military campaign against the Rajput kingdom of Chittor in present-day Rajasthan. The siege resulted in the capture of the fortress and annexation of the territory into the Sultanate.

2. Siege of Ranthambore (1301): Alauddin besieged the Rajput fortress of Ranthambore and eventually captured it after a prolonged siege. The conquest of Ranthambore strengthened the Sultanate's control over the region.
3. Mongol Invasions: Alauddin repelled several Mongol invasions from Central Asia, conducting defensive campaigns to safeguard the Sultanate's borders and prevent Mongol incursions into Indian territory.

Conclusion:

Alauddin Khalji's reign as Sultan of Delhi was marked by ambitious administrative reforms, military conquests, and wars aimed at expanding the Sultanate's territories and consolidating his authority. His pragmatic governance and military prowess left a lasting impact on the Delhi Sultanate, shaping its political, economic, and military landscape for generations to come.

Alauddin Khalji's market policy, also known as the "Market Reforms" or "Price Control Measures," was a significant aspect of his administration aimed at regulating prices and ensuring a stable supply of essential commodities within the Delhi Sultanate. These policies were implemented to address economic challenges, particularly during times of scarcity and inflation. Here's an overview of Alauddin Khalji's market policy:

Context:

During Alauddin Khalji's reign, the Delhi Sultanate faced economic instability due to factors such as droughts, famines, and disruptions in trade routes. These conditions led to price fluctuations, hoarding of goods by merchants, and scarcity of essential commodities, threatening the stability of the Sultanate's economy and food security.

Market Regulations:

Alauddin Khalji introduced several market regulations and price control measures to address these challenges:

1. Price Control: Alauddin implemented strict price controls on essential commodities, including grains, pulses, cloth, and other consumer goods. Maximum price limits were set for these items to prevent merchants from charging exorbitant prices during times of scarcity.
2. State Monopoly: The Sultanate established state-controlled markets (diwan-i-riyasat) where essential commodities were bought and sold under the supervision of government officials. This allowed the state to regulate prices and ensure fair distribution of goods to the population.
3. Prohibition of Hoarding: Alauddin prohibited hoarding of essential commodities by merchants and traders. Strict penalties were imposed on those found guilty of hoarding, including confiscation of goods and heavy fines.
4. Supply Chain Management: The Sultanate implemented measures to streamline the supply chain of essential commodities, including transportation and distribution networks. Roads and trade routes were maintained to ensure the smooth flow of goods from production centers to markets.

5. Public Granaries: Alauddin established public granaries (sarkari anaj mandis) to store surplus grains during times of plenty. These granaries served as a buffer against shortages and helped in stabilizing prices during periods of scarcity.

Impact:

Alauddin Khalji's market policy had several consequences and impacts on the economy and society of the Delhi Sultanate:

1. Stabilization of Prices: The price control measures implemented by Alauddin helped in stabilizing prices of essential commodities, ensuring affordability for the general population, particularly during times of crisis.
2. Reduction of Speculation: The prohibition of hoarding and state control over markets reduced speculation and profiteering by merchants, ensuring a fair distribution of goods and preventing artificial price inflation.
3. Food Security: The establishment of public granaries and efficient supply chain management contributed to food security and mitigated the impact of famines and shortages on the population.
4. Centralization of Authority: Alauddin's market policy centralized economic authority in the hands of the state, strengthening the Sultanate's control over economic affairs and enhancing royal revenue.

Criticism and Legacy:

While Alauddin Khalji's market policy was effective in addressing immediate economic challenges, it also faced criticism from some quarters. Critics argued that the strict price controls and state intervention in the economy stifled entrepreneurship and innovation, leading to a decline in economic activity in the long run.

Nevertheless, Alauddin Khalji's market policy left a lasting legacy in the Delhi Sultanate's economic history. It demonstrated the Sultanate's capacity to intervene in economic affairs and manage market forces for the benefit of the population. Additionally, the market regulations implemented by Alauddin laid the groundwork for subsequent economic policies and administrative reforms in the Sultanate.

- Reign: Alauddin Khalji, one of the most powerful rulers of the Khilji dynasty, ascended to the throne after assassinating his uncle Jalal-ud-din.
- Centralized Administration: Alauddin implemented a highly centralized administrative system, concentrating power in the hands of the Sultan.
- Military Campaigns and Expansion: He conducted successful military campaigns to expand the territorial boundaries of the Sultanate, including conquests in Gujarat, Ranthambore, Malwa, and Deccan.
- Market Reforms: Alauddin introduced market regulations to control prices and prevent hoarding of essential goods, known as the market reform (Diwan-i-Riyasat).
- Revenue Reforms: He instituted revenue reforms, including the introduction of the measurement of agricultural land (Dahsala System) and revenue assessment based on the produce.

- Military Organization: Alauddin strengthened the Sultanate's military organization, particularly the standing army (Newiki), and introduced reforms in recruitment, pay, and discipline.

3. Qutb-ud-din Mubarak Shah (1316-1320):

- Reign: Qutb-ud-din Mubarak Shah, also known as Khusro Khan, became the Sultan after assassinating Alauddin's son, Sultan Qutb-ud-din Khilji.
- Administration: His reign was marked by political instability and conflicts within the ruling elite.
- End of the Khilji Dynasty: The assassination of Qutb-ud-din Mubarak Shah in 1320 marked the end of the Khilji dynasty, paving the way for the Tughlaq dynasty to ascend to power.

Administrative Features of the Khilji Dynasty:

1. Centralization of Power: The Khilji rulers centralized administrative authority, concentrating power in the hands of the Sultan.
2. Military Expansion: The dynasty pursued an aggressive military policy, leading to the expansion of the Delhi Sultanate's territorial boundaries.
3. Economic Reforms: Alauddin Khalji's economic reforms aimed to strengthen the economy and increase state revenue through market regulations and revenue assessments.
4. Efficient Governance: The Khilji rulers implemented administrative measures to maintain law and order, ensure revenue collection, and strengthen the Sultanate's administrative machinery.

Overall, the Khilji dynasty made significant contributions to the Delhi Sultanate's administration, military prowess, and territorial expansion, shaping the course of medieval Indian history during their rule.

The Tughlaq Dynasty (1320-1413) For Prelims: Tughlaq Dynasty For Mains: Muhammad bin Tughlaq's Experiments, Policies Taken by Firoz Shah Tughlaq, Agrarian Reforms & Changes in Nobility During the Reign of Muhammad Tughlaq After the Khilji dynasty, the Tughlaq dynasty (1320-1413) came to power in Delhi. The Tughlaq dynasty formed an important period in the history and culture of the Sultanate. Economic life accelerated due to the establishment of karkhanas or factories, and irrigated canals facilitated agriculture. Inland and maritime trade increased and quickened the process of urbanization. Urban centers, schools, mosques, and public buildings also proliferated. Who were the Important Rulers of the Tughlaq Dynasty? Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq (Ghazi Malik) The founder of the Tughlaq dynasty was Ghazi Malik who ascended the throne as Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq in AD 1320. After a brief rule, he died in AD 1325 and his son Muhammad Tughlaq ascended to the throne. Under the Tughlaqs the Delhi Sultanate was further consolidated. Many outlying territories were brought under the direct control of the Sultanate. He built the fortress city of Tughlaqabad which was the capital and a strong fortress designed for defense. Muhammad Bin Tughlaq He became the Sultan of Delhi after his father's death, even though he has been blamed for his father's death by some historians. The Sultan believed in the Divine Right theory of kingship. Following a liberal policy, he appointed officials irrespective of caste, creed, or religion. He also did not discriminate against his Hindu subjects. He undertook a policy of conquest and sent expeditionary forces to Khurasan, Nagarkot, Qarajal, Mewar, Telingana, and Malabar. Diplomatic relations were established with many Asian countries. His empire was the most extensive one among the medieval Sultans. He constructed the Royal residence of Jahanpanah along with the Begumpuri mosque. Firoz Shah Tughlaq The cousin of Muhammad Tughlaq, Feroz (or Firuz) Shah Tughluq, ascended the throne in 1351 and ruled until 1388. Although not a capable military leader like his predecessors, the Sultan was a great builder of cities, monuments, and public buildings. The Sultan imposed the four taxes sanctioned by Islamic laws, including a tax on non-Muslims. His campaign to Jajnagar (Odisha) in 1361 destroyed the famous Puri Jagannatha temple. What were the Achievements of Firoz Shah? Firoz Shah Tughlaq worked majorly for the development of infrastructure in his kingdom. Diwan-i-Khairat: Office for charity Diwan-i-Bundagan: Department of slave Sarais (Rest House): For the benefit of merchants and other travellers Four New Towns: Firozabad, Fatehabad, Jaunpur and Hissar He constructed canals from: Yamuna to the city of Hissar Sutlej to the Ghaggar Ghaggar to Firozabad Mandvi and Sirmour Hills to Hansi in Haryana Taxes imposed under Firoz Shah Tughlaq: Kharaj: Land tax which was equal to one-tenth of the produce of the land Zakat: Two and a half percent tax on property realised from Muslims Kham: One-fifth of the booty captured (four-fifth was left for the soldiers) Other Taxes: The irrigation tax, garden tax, octroi tax and the sales tax What were Muhammad bin Tughlaq's Experiments? Transfer of Capital Next to Alauddin Khalji, Muhammad bin Tughlaq (1324 - 1351) is best remembered as a ruler who undertook a number of bold experiments and showed a keen interest in agriculture. The most controversial step that Muhammad Tughlaq undertook soon after his accession was the so-called transfer of the capital from Delhi to Deogir (later renamed as Daulatabad). Only the upper classes, such as the shaikhs, nobles, and ulema, were required to move to Daulatabad, while the rest of the population remained in Delhi. Eventually, due to growing discontent and the realisation that it was difficult to control the northern territories from the south, Muhammad bin Tughlaq decided to abandon Daulatabad as the capital. It helped in bringing North and South India closer together by improving communications. Many people, including religious divines who had gone to Daulatabad, settled down there. They became the means of spreading in the Deccan the cultural, religious and social ideas which the Turks had brought with them to north India. This resulted in a new process of cultural interaction between North and South India, as well as in South India itself. Token Currency Another controversial project undertaken by Muhammad bin Tughlaq was the introduction of "Token Currency". According to Barani, the Sultan introduced token currency because the treasury was empty due to the Sultan's schemes of conquest as well as his boundless generosity. There was a shortage of silver in the world in the fourteenth century and India had to face the crisis. Therefore, the Sultan was forced to issue copper coins instead of silver. He introduced a copper coin (Jittal) instead of a silver coin (tanka) and ordered that it be accepted as equivalent to the tanka. However, the idea of token currency was new in India and was difficult for traders and common people to accept. The State also did not take proper precautions to check the imitation of coins issued by mints. The government could not prevent people from forging new coins and soon new coins flooded the markets. According to Barani, the people began to mint token currency in their houses. However, the common man failed to distinguish between copper coins issued by the royal treasury and those which were locally made. Thus, the Sultan was forced to withdraw the token currency.

Khurasan & Qarachil Expedition In the early 14th century, the Delhi Sultanate under Muhammad bin Tughluq embarked on several military expeditions to secure its frontiers and resolve boundary disputes. The Khurasan expedition aimed to establish more defensible frontiers in the west. However, this expedition did not materialize. Qarachil expedition was an attempt to resolve a boundary dispute with neighboring hill states that were under Chinese influence. However, this expedition ended in failure. Despite this setback, there was later diplomatic communication between China and Delhi.

What Agrarian Reforms & Changes in Nobility Took Place During the Reign of Muhammad Tughlaq?

Agrarian Reforms: Muhammad Tughlaq undertook a number of measures to improve agriculture. Most of these were tried out in the Doab region. Muhammad Tughlaq did not believe in Alauddin Khalji's policy of trying to reduce the khuts and muqaddams (headmen in the villages) to the position of ordinary cultivators. But he did want an adequate share of the land revenue for the state. The measures he advocated had a long-term impact, but they failed disastrously during his reign. Right at the beginning of Muhammad Tughlaq's reign, there was a serious peasant rebellion in the Gangetic doab due to over-assessment. Peasants fled the villages and Muhammad Tughlaq took harsh measures to capture and punish them. A severe famine that ravaged the area for half a dozen years made the situation worse. Efforts at relief by giving advances for cattle and seeds, and for digging wells came too late. So many people died in Delhi that the air became pestilential. The sultan left Delhi and for two and half years lived in a camp called Swargadwari, 100 miles from Delhi on the banks of the Ganges near Kanauj. After returning to Delhi, Muhammad Tughlaq launched a scheme to extend and improve cultivation in the doab. He set up a separate department called diwan-i-amiri-kohi. The area was divided into development blocs headed by an official whose job was to extend cultivation by giving loans to the cultivators and to induce them to cultivate superior crops—wheat in place of barley, sugarcane in place of wheat, grapes and dates in place of sugarcane, etc. The scheme failed largely because the men chosen for the purpose proved to be inexperienced and dishonest, and misappropriated the money for their own use. Muhammad Tughlaq had died in the meantime, and Firoz had written off the loans. But the policy advocated by Muhammad Tughlaq for extending and improving cultivation was not lost. It was taken up by Firoz, and even more vigorously later on by Akbar. Challenges of a Diverse Nobility: Another problem that Muhammad Tughlaq had to face was the problem of the nobility. With the downfall of the Chahalgani Turks and the rise of the Khaljis, the nobility was drawn from Muslims belonging to different races, including Indian converts. Muhammad Tughlaq entertained people who did not belong to noble families but belonged to castes such as barbers, cooks, weavers, wine-makers, etc. He even gave them important offices. His nobility consisted of descendants of Muslim converts, including a few Hindus, as well as foreign appointees. This diverse composition led to a lack of cohesiveness and loyalty among the nobles. The vast empire provided opportunities for rebellion and the establishment of independent spheres of authority. Muhammad Tughlaq's harsh punishments further fueled this trend. As a result, his reign marked both the zenith of the Delhi Sultanate and the beginning of its disintegration.

How did Firoz Shah Tughlaq Rise to Power? During Muhammad Tughlaq's reign, there were repeated rebellions across his empire, particularly in South India. These uprisings were organised by local governors and caused significant strain on his armies. Muhammad Tughlaq's forces were further weakened by a devastating plague, resulting in the death of two-thirds of his army. After returning from south India, another rebellion led by Harihara and Bukka led to the establishment of the Vijayanagara Empire, while foreign nobles in the Deccan formed the Bahmani Empire. Bengal also gained independence. Although Muhammad Tughlaq managed to suppress rebellions in Awadh, Gujarat, and Sind, he ultimately died in Sind and was succeeded by his cousin, Firuz Tughlaq. Since Muhammad Tughlaq's policies created discontent among the nobles, army, and influential Muslim theologians and Sufi saints. After ascending to power, Firoz Tughlaq faced the challenge of preventing the disintegration of the Delhi Sultanate. He pursued a policy of appeasement towards the nobles, army, and theologians while asserting authority over easily manageable areas. He did not attempt to regain control over South India and the Deccan.

What were the Policies Taken by Firoz Shah Tughlaq? Firoz Tughlaq was not a remarkable military leader, but his reign brought a period of peace and gradual development. He implemented a decree allowing the succession of positions and iqta (land grants) to the sons, sons-in-law, and slaves of deceased nobles. He abolished the practice of torturing nobles and officials during account audits. These measures pleased the nobles and minimised rebellions. However, the policy of hereditary offices and iqta had long-term drawbacks. It limited the recruitment of competent individuals outside a small circle and made the sultan dependent on a narrow oligarchy. He extended the principle of heredity to the army, allowing old soldiers to be replaced by their sons, sons-in-law, or slaves. Soldiers were no longer paid in cash but instead received assignments on land revenue from villages. Consequently, soldiers did not benefit in the long run, and the military administration became lax, and corruption increased. He aimed to appease the theologians by proclaiming himself a true Muslim king and emphasising that his state was truly Islamic. Since the time of Iltutmish, there had been a conflict between the orthodox theologians and the sultans regarding the nature of the state and its policies towards non-Muslims. To maintain the theologians' satisfaction, some were appointed to high offices, although the judiciary and educational system remained under their control. He boycotted the practices in the kingdom, the scholars deemed un-Islamic. He was the one who started the imposition of Jaziya. Firuz Tughlaq was the first ruler who took steps to have Hindu religious works translated from Sanskrit into Persian, so that there may be a better understanding of Hindu ideas and practices. Many books on music, medicine and mathematics were also translated from Sanskrit into Persian during his reign.

The Tughlaq dynasty was a medieval Muslim dynasty that ruled over the Delhi Sultanate in the Indian subcontinent from 1320 to 1414. It was founded by Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq and is known for its ambitious military campaigns, administrative reforms, and architectural patronage. Here's an overview of the Tughlaq dynasty:

Origins:

The founder of the Tughlaq dynasty, Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq, was a Turkish slave of the Khalji dynasty. He served as a provincial governor under Alauddin Khalji and rose to prominence after the decline of the Khalji dynasty. Ghiyasuddin established the Tughlaq dynasty after assuming the throne in 1320 following the death of the last Khalji ruler.

Reign of Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq (1320-1325):

Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq (1320-25): Founder of the Tughlaq dynasty

After ascending to the Delhi throne, Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq adopted a sustained and vigorous forward policy. Thus started the expansion of the Delhi sultanate's borders.

In 1321, he sent his eldest son Ulugh Khan (later known as Muhammad bin Tughlaq), to Deogir to plunder the Hindu kingdoms of Warangal. But this first attempt was a failure. Four months later, Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq sent large army reinforcements for his son asking him to attempt plundering Arangal and Tilang again and this time Ulugh Khan succeeded.

- Arangal fell, was renamed Sultanpur, and the wealth and treasury were plundered and the captives were transferred from Warangal to the capital of Delhi Sultanate.

This was followed by the conquest and annexation of Mabar (Tamil Nadu coast). After this, Ulugh Khan raided Odisha and returned to Delhi with rich plunder. By 1324, the borders of the Delhi sultanate had reached up to Madurai. In 1328, the last Hindu principality of the area, Kampili (south Karnataka) was also annexed.

Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq, the founder of the Tughlaq dynasty, ruled over the Delhi Sultanate from 1320 to 1325. His reign marked the beginning of a new chapter in the history of the Sultanate, characterized by ambitious military campaigns, administrative reforms, and architectural patronage. Here's an overview of Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq's reign:

Origins and Ascension:

- Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq was a Turkish slave of the Khalji dynasty who rose to prominence as a provincial governor under Alauddin Khalji.
- After the decline of the Khalji dynasty, Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq seized power and established himself as the Sultan of Delhi in 1320.
- He founded the Tughlaq dynasty, which would rule over the Delhi Sultanate for nearly a century.

Administrative Reforms:

- Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq introduced administrative reforms aimed at centralizing power and strengthening the Sultanate's authority.
- He expanded the administrative apparatus of the Sultanate, establishing new revenue systems and appointing loyal officials to key positions.
- Ghiyasuddin sought to consolidate the Sultanate's control over its territories and ensure efficient governance throughout the realm.

Military Campaigns:

- Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq conducted military campaigns to expand the territorial boundaries of the Sultanate.
- His conquests included territories in Bengal, Punjab, and South India, as he sought to extend the influence of the Sultanate across the Indian subcontinent.
- However, his reign was also marked by conflicts with neighboring kingdoms and rebellions within the Sultanate, which posed challenges to his authority.

Infrastructure Projects:

- Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq initiated several infrastructure projects aimed at enhancing the Sultanate's prosperity and security.
- He oversaw the construction of canals, forts, and public buildings, contributing to the development of Delhi as a prominent urban center.
- These architectural endeavors reflected Ghiyasuddin's vision for the Sultanate's growth and prosperity under his rule.

Conclusion:

Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq's reign as the founder of the Tughlaq dynasty marked a period of transition and consolidation for the Delhi Sultanate. His administrative reforms, military campaigns, and infrastructure projects laid the foundation for the subsequent expansion and development of the Sultanate under his successors. Despite the challenges he faced during his brief reign, Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq's contributions left a lasting impact on the history and legacy of the Delhi Sultanate.

- Administration: Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq introduced administrative reforms aimed at centralizing power and strengthening the Sultanate's authority. He expanded the administrative apparatus, established new revenue systems, and appointed loyal officials to key positions.
- Military Campaigns: Ghiyasuddin conducted military campaigns to expand the territorial boundaries of the Sultanate. His conquests included territories in Bengal, Punjab, and South India. However, his reign was also marked by conflicts with neighboring kingdoms and rebellions within the Sultanate.
- Infrastructure Projects: Ghiyasuddin initiated several infrastructure projects, including the construction of canals, forts, and public buildings. His architectural patronage contributed to the development of Delhi as a prominent urban center.

Muhammad bin Tughlaq (1325-1351):

Muhammad bin Tughlaq, the son of Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq, ascended the throne of the Delhi Sultanate in 1325 after the death of his father. His reign, from 1325 to 1351, is one of the most fascinating and controversial periods in the history of the Sultanate. Muhammad bin Tughlaq's rule was marked by ambitious administrative reforms, military campaigns, and grandiose projects. Here's an overview of his reign:

Administrative Reforms:

- Muhammad bin Tughlaq implemented ambitious administrative reforms aimed at centralizing power and improving governance.
- He introduced several innovative measures, including the introduction of token currency (Tanka and Jital), land reforms, and a system of controlled prices for essential commodities.
- Muhammad bin Tughlaq's administrative reforms were characterized by their ambitious scope and intention to modernize and streamline the Sultanate's administration.

Military Campaigns:

- Muhammad bin Tughlaq conducted military campaigns to expand the territorial boundaries of the Sultanate and assert its dominance over neighboring kingdoms.

- His military campaigns included expeditions to the Deccan region, Central Asia, and the Gangetic plains. However, many of these campaigns were marred by logistical challenges, setbacks, and limited success.
- Despite some initial victories, Muhammad bin Tughlaq's military campaigns faced resistance from local rulers and failed to achieve lasting conquests in many regions.

Relocation of the Capital:

- One of the most controversial decisions of Muhammad bin Tughlaq's reign was the relocation of the capital from Delhi to Daulatabad (in present-day Maharashtra) in 1327.
- The relocation was intended to centralize authority and protect the Sultanate from Mongol invasions. However, the move proved to be highly impractical and unpopular among the populace.
- Muhammad bin Tughlaq eventually reversed the decision and returned the capital to Delhi after facing logistical and administrative challenges in Daulatabad.

Economic Policies:

- Muhammad bin Tughlaq's economic policies, including the introduction of token currency and controlled prices, aimed to stabilize the economy and address fiscal challenges.
- However, many of these policies faced opposition and were poorly implemented, leading to economic disruptions and hardships for the population.

Legacy:

- Muhammad bin Tughlaq's reign is often remembered for its grandiose projects, ambitious reforms, and controversial decisions.
 - While his administrative innovations and military campaigns showcased his vision and ambition, they also highlighted the limitations of centralized authority and the complexities of governing a diverse and vast empire.
 - Muhammad bin Tughlaq's reign left a lasting impact on the history of the Delhi Sultanate, serving as a cautionary tale about the perils of overreach and the challenges of governance in medieval India.
- Administrative Reforms: Muhammad bin Tughlaq implemented ambitious administrative reforms, including the introduction of token currency, land reforms, and a system of controlled prices for essential commodities. However, many of these reforms faced opposition and were eventually abandoned.
 - Military Campaigns: Muhammad bin Tughlaq conducted military campaigns to expand the Sultanate's territories, including expeditions to the Deccan and Central Asia. His attempts to annex the Deccan and repel Mongol invasions were largely unsuccessful.
 - Relocation of the Capital: Muhammad bin Tughlaq famously relocated the capital of the Sultanate from Delhi to Daulatabad (in present-day Maharashtra) in an attempt to centralize authority and protect the Sultanate from Mongol invasions. However, this decision proved to be unpopular and was eventually reversed.

Later Tughlaq Rulers:

- The later rulers of the Tughlaq dynasty faced challenges such as regional rebellions, administrative inefficiency, and economic instability. The dynasty gradually declined in power and influence.
- The last Tughlaq ruler, Nasiruddin Mahmud Shah Tughlaq, was overthrown by the Sayyid dynasty in 1414, marking the end of Tughlaq rule in the Delhi Sultanate.
- The Tughlaq dynasty left a lasting legacy in Indian history through its administrative reforms, military conquests, and architectural patronage.
- Despite facing criticism for their ambitious projects and administrative failures, the Tughlaq rulers played a significant role in shaping the political and cultural landscape of medieval India.

The Tughlaq Dynasty (also spelt Tughluq), ruled the Delhi sultanate from 1320 to 1413. Followed by the Khalji dynasty and preceded by the Sayyids, the Tughlaq dynasty formed an important period in the history and culture of the Sultanate. Economic life accelerated due to the establishment of karkhanas or factories, and irrigated canals facilitated agriculture. Inland and maritime trade increased and quickened the process of urbanization. Urban centers, schools, mosques, and public buildings also proliferated.

The Delhi Sultanate

In 1192 the victory of Muhammed of Ghur over the Rajput King, Prithviraj Chauhan III (r. c. 1177-1192) led to an alien rule being established in the Indian subcontinent. Shamsuddin Iltutmish (r. 1210-1236) styled himself as Sultan in 1206, and the Delhi Sultanate continued until 1526 when Ziauddin Babur (1483–1530) defeated Ibrahim Lodi (r.1517-1526). The Delhi Sultanate's rulers followed the Islamic faith.

A period of consolidation began in the 13th century. Queen Raziya (r. 1236-1240), the first woman Muslim ruler of India, received from her father Iltutmish a vast kingdom. Ghiyasuddin Balban (r. 1265-1286) ruled with an iron hand with the divine right theory of kingship. The Khalji period (1290- 1320) marked the beginning of the ascendancy of Indian Muslims and their empire even extended up to southern India. The rule by the Tughlaqs, Sayyids (1414-1451), and Lodis (1451-1526) witnessed the gradual weakening of the Delhi Sultanate.

THE NEW TECHNIQUE OF INDO-ISLAMIC ARCHITECTURE WITNESSED THE CONSTRUCTION OF BEAUTIFUL ARCHES, DOMES & GARDENS.

There was religious harmony among ordinary people, although there was conflict among elites. The Sufi and Bhakti saints emphasized religious harmony and the equality of humankind. The new technique of Indo-Islamic architecture witnessed the construction of beautiful arches, domes, and gardens. The Urdu language was emerging with the amalgamation of dialects of Hindi and Persian. There was also a proliferation of vernacular literature. There was, too, an exchange of diplomatic missions, even with China.

Thus, the reign of the Delhi Sultans formed a crucial period in the history of the Indian subcontinent.

The contemporary historical writings of Ziauddin Barani (Tarikh-i-Firuz Shahi and Fatwa-i-Jahandari), Ibn Battuta (The Rihla), and Shams Siraj Afif (Tarikh-i-Firuz Shahi) provide source materials for studying different aspects of the Delhi Sultanate.

Ghiyasuddin Tughluq

Ghiyasuddin Tughluq (aka Ghiyath al-Din Tughluq, r. 1320-1325) was the founder of the Tughluq dynasty. He was governor of the northwest provinces at the time of Nasiruddin Khusrav Shah (r. 1320), a Hindu convert. The Turk tribes did not reconcile to the rule of a converted Muslim as they believed in the superiority of the Turkish race. Ghiyasuddin gathered around him the nobility and became the Sultan after deposing Khusrav. He suppressed the recalcitrant Hindu Rajas and undertook a policy of territorial aggrandizement. In 1323, the Telingana kingdom in south India was annexed. The Tughluq army plundered Jajnagar in Odisha. East and south Bengal were incorporated into the Sultanate while north Bengal remained a vassal state under Nasiruddin Ibrahim.

As a capable military commander, the Sultan revamped the army organization making it battle-ready. The soldiers were well-looking and Ghiyasuddin pursued a paternalistic policy towards peasants. Agriculture was also improved and revenue officers were explicitly ordered not to be harsh with cultivators. Means of communication also improved a great deal. Bridges, roads, and canals were constructed. The postal system became more efficient. The Sultan had a fair sense of justice and he prohibited inhuman punishment, but thieves and corrupt revenue officials were not spared. On a personal level, the Sultan was a strict disciplinarian and strict follower of Islamic laws, eschewing alcohol as well as worldly pleasures.

The Sultan died in 1325 due to the collapse of a wooden pavilion built in his honour. It was believed that his son, Jauna Khan had a hand in the accident. On the whole, Ghiyasuddin was a successful Sultan. He had extended the kingdom's boundaries, looked after the people's welfare, and filled up the state treasury.

Muhammad Bin Tughluq

Muhammad Bin Tughluq (r. 1325-1351) became the Sultan of Delhi after his father's death, Ghiyasuddin Tughluq even though he has been blamed for his father's death by some historians. The Sultan believed in the Divine Right theory of kingship. Following a liberal policy, he appointed officials irrespective of caste, creed, or religion. He also did not discriminate against his Hindu subjects. Muhammad Tughluq undertook a policy of conquest and sent expeditionary forces to Khurasan, Nagarkot, Qarajal, Mewar, Telingana, and Malabar. Diplomatic relations were established with many Asian countries. His empire was the most extensive one among the medieval Sultans.

The projects of the Sultan were far ahead of his time but these often failed due to improper execution and the unpopularity of the schemes. The creation of another capital in Daultabad, taxation in the Doab region, introduction of token currency, etc., created great hardship for his subjects and invited opposition. With the best of intentions, the Sultan's experiments were grand failures. His reign period witnessed dissent and rebellions. The governors of the northwestern province and Bengal were given harsh punishments. Independent kingdoms came into existence, such as Malabar, Vijayanagar, and Bhamani. At the time of his death in 1351, the disintegration of the Delhi Sultanate had already begun. Although he had ruled over a vast empire, the Sultan was not able to hold it together. The learned, liberal and tolerant Sultan, the most controversial figure of medieval India, failed as a ruler. He was not schizophrenic as has been alleged but, averse to any advice, the Sultan could not measure his subjects' pulse.

Feroz Shah Tughluq

The cousin of Muhammad Tughluq, Feroz (or Firuz) Shah Tughluq, ascended the throne in 1351 and ruled until 1388. Although not a capable military leader like his predecessors, the Sultan was a great builder of cities, monuments, and public buildings. The Sultan imposed the four taxes sanctioned by the Islamic laws, including a tax on non-Muslims, Jeziya. Depending on the priestly classes or the ulemas, the state was intolerant towards the zimmmis (non-Muslims) and the Shias. His campaign to Jajnagar (Odisha) in 1361 destroyed the famous Puri Jagannatha temple. Firuz did not attempt to retrieve the territories lost in the previous reign and his military organization was fragile. His fondness for keeping a large retinue of slaves resulted in the depletion of the state coffers.

Firuz, a patron of learning, established 30 madrasas (Islamic schools) and three colleges. Although intolerant of the Hindus, he ordered the translation of religious scriptures into Persian. His humanitarian measures included the building of orphanages and charitable hospitals. His construction activity included establishing scores of towns, undertaking irrigation works, and digging public wells. Firuz took special care in maintaining and repairing famous monuments like the Qutb Minar, Jama masjid, and mausoleums of some of the earlier sultans. Jaunpur, Hissar, Fatehabad, and Firozpur were just some of the urban centers which thrived in the Sultan's reign. Firuz resided in the newly built city of Firuzabad in Delhi, and its ruins, Feroz Shah Kotla, are extant. The Sultan's last days were not happy due to civil wars and in-fighting over the future of the throne; the death of his eldest son Faterh Khan in 1374 made him almost senile. His grandson Tughluq Shah (r. 1388-1389) became the next Sultan after his death.

The Last Tughluq Sultans

The experiments of Muhammad Tughluq, the weakness of Firuz, the incompetent successors that followed, the depletion of state resources, and the wars in south India were all responsible for the ultimate downfall of the Tughluq dynasty. Tughlaq Shah was assassinated by nobles proclaiming loyalty to his cousin, Abu Bakr Shah (r.1389-1390). Muhammad Shah (r. 1390-1393) in turn, deposed Abu Bakr. By the time of the ruler Mahmud Nasiruddin (r. 1393-1394), the Tughluq Empire covered an area of just seven miles from Delhi to Palam. Alauddin Sikandar, son of Muhammad Shah then ruled for some months in 1394. His younger brother Nasir Muhammad Shah (r.1394-1412) was the last member of the Tughlaq dynasty. The sack and plunder of Delhi by the Mongol chief Timur (1336-1405) in 1398 was the last blow from which the dynasty did not recover.

Indo-Islamic Architecture under the Tughluqs

Islamic architecture had developed considerably from the first Islamic building of Kaba and the Grand Mosque surrounding it. When Islam came to the Indian subcontinent, a new era began. Islam was confronted with an existing style of architecture that was very old and developed. Gradually, there was a synthesis of Hindu and Muslim styles, and Indo-Islamic architecture developed its own identity. The city of Delhi was the primary focus of the architecture of the Sultanate.

Indo-Islamic architecture developed further under the Tughluqs. Among the imposing structures built by the Sultans were the city of Tughlaqabad, Firozabad, the tomb of Firuz, and others. Ghiyasuddin Tughluq built the fortress city of Tughlaqabad in Delhi between 1321 and 1325. It was the capital, and a strong fortress designed for defense. The palace- fortress enclave was constructed by checking the Jamuna river flow, resulting in the creation of an artificial lake, which surrounded the city in the eastern direction of the fort. Tughlaqabad occupied a massive area of rectangular shape, encompassed by walls ranging from 15 to 30 meters with a thickness of about 10 meters. The bastions having two stories and gargantuan towers, surrounded the palace, audience halls, tombs, and mosque. The sloping walls, called batter, were a novelty of Tughlaqabad.

The mausoleum of Ghiyasuddin Tughluq was located on the southern side of the fortress. Built by the Sultan, the tomb is in the shape of a pentagon surrounded by fortified walls with an angle of 75 degrees. Built of red sandstone with a dome of white marble, the archways present a perfect combination of arch and beam, blending the trabeate and arcuate method. The interior, containing the sarcophagus, has a single chamber surmounted by a dome.

A legend mentions the discord between the Sultan and the Sufi saint, Khwaja Nazimuddin Auylia (1236-1325), which was responsible for the demise of the Thughalaqbad. Ghiyassuddin could not reach the capital from Bengal and was killed when the wooden pavilion built in his honour collapsed. The Sultan did not permit the workers to be employed by the Saint, who uttered the famous prophecy, Hunuz Dilli dur ast (Delhi is yet far away).

Muhammad Tughluq constructed the Royal residence of Jahanpanah along with the Begumpuri mosque. Another passionate builder, Firuz Shah Tughluq constructed many towns, mosques, reservoirs, pavilions, and bridges. His newly built fortress city of Firoz Shah Kotla is extant amid ruins. The old fort-city of Tughlaqabad was abandoned, and the new capital city of Firoz Shah Kotla was constructed with a rectangular plan of about 800 by 400 metres (2624 x 1312 ft). A fortified stone wall surrounded the town with the main entrance on the western side. It encompassed the quarters of the guards and soldiers, a rectangular-shaped Mahall-i Bari Amm (Palace of the Public Court), and a square pillared hall for transacting the private business of the Sultan. On rectangular and square-shaped courts stood residential quarters of the Royalty, Hawa Mahall (palace of the winds), Kushk-i-Shikar (hunting place), mosque pigeon-tower, baoli (stepped well), and exquisite gardens with running water and fountains. The Sultan's abode was Kushk-i-Feroze. Friday prayers were offered in the public mosque or Jami masjid, with its spacious courtyard and series of cells.

One of the city's unique features is the pillar of Mauryan Emperor Ashoka (r. c. 268 - c. 232 BCE), raised on a three-tiered pyramid-like structure. It was removed from its original location in the Topra district of Ambala, Haryana. The pillar, encased in reed and raw animal skins, was moved with the help of a 42-wheel carriage drawn by about 200 people. On the banks of the river Jamuna, it was ferried and carried to the present location. In 1356, stone friezes were placed around it.

Finally, the Feroz Shah Kotla has been used as a cricket ground by the Delhi District Cricket Association since November 1948. The stadium was named after Arun Jaitley, an Indian politician, in 2019.

The period of the Tughluqs forms an important period in the history and culture of the Delhi Sultanate. Economic life accelerated due to the establishment of karkhanas or factories (trading centers) by Firuz. The inland and maritime trade increased and quickened the process of urbanization. Urban centers, schools, mosques, and public buildings also proliferated. The contemporary historical writings of Ziyauddin Barani (Tarikh-i-Firuz Shahi and Fatwa-i-Jahandari) and Shams Siraj Afif (Tarikh-i-Firuz Shahi) provide additional source materials for studying different aspects of the Delhi Sultanate.

Timur's Invasion

Timur (9 April 1336 – 17–19 February 1405) was a Turco-Mongol conqueror who established the Timurid Empire in modern-day Afghanistan, Iran, and Central Asia, becoming the Timurid dynasty's first ruler. Timur invaded northern India in 1398, attacking the Delhi Sultanate, which was ruled by the Tughlaq dynasty's Sultan Nasir-ud-Din

Mahmud Shah Tughluq. He sacked Tulamba and massacred its inhabitants after crossing the Indus River on September 30, 1398. Then he advanced further and by October, had captured Multan.

- Background

- Timur Lane was an uzbek Mongol chieftain who embraced Islam and claimed to be a descendant of Genghis Khan.
- In 1380, when Feroz Shah's successors were feuding and threatening to destroy the empire, he invaded India from the north and demolished the centralised rule of Delhi.
- In 1398, he destroyed the Turkish Sultanate of Delhi and ordered the execution of at least 50,000 captives prior to the battle of Delhi, and around 100,000 Delhi residents were taken as slaves after the battle.
- It is estimated that Timur's army slaughtered up to 100,000 natives. Timur marched all the way to the Ganges, but problems in Western Asia forced him to return.
- Timur retired to Samarqand after invading and plundering Delhi, leaving behind a large number of Uzbek genes throughout North India.
- Timur and his Mongol-Turkish hordes overran Persia, Khorasan, Jurjan, Afghanistan, and Azerbaijan during these invasions, earning Tamerlane the moniker "Prince of Destruction."
- At the age of 33, Timur became the leader of the Chaghtai Turks and conceived the concept of world conquest. After conquering Persia, Afghanistan, and Mesopotamia, he turned his attention to India.
- Early in 1398, he dispatched his grandson Pir Muhammad, who led an army of 30,000 horses. He crossed the Indus River and conquered Uch and Multan.
- Timur marched towards India with a large force of 92,000 cavalry in August 1398.
- When he arrived in Delhi, Muhammad Shah, the last ruler of the Tughlaq family, was the sultan.
- Timur arrived in Delhi as a conqueror in 1399. He agreed to spare the lives of the citizens in exchange for a large ransom.
- However, the soldiers' conduct in collecting provisions prompted the Hindus to rebel, and Timur then ordered a general massacre, destroying Delhi.
- Timur did not stay in Delhi for long, and he left with a large number of slaves and booty after 15 days.
- He appointed Khizar Khan as governor of Multan, Lahore, and Dipalpur, leaving tales of horror and destruction, as well as famine and pestilence, behind him.
- When Timur left India, the country was in chaos. Famine and pestilence struck as a result of the total destruction of grain stores and standing crops, and it took Delhi more than a half-century to recover from the devastation.
- Thousands of innocent people had been brutally murdered, many cities and large villages had been reduced to ashes, and provincial administration had been completely disrupted.

Effects of Timur's Invasion

- Timur's invasion had far-reaching political, cultural, and economic consequences for the history of the Subcontinent. Timur destroyed and pillaged cities in India, leaving famine and pestilence in his wake.
- He took enormous wealth with him and left the people impoverished and helpless.
- Delhi never regained her independence until it fell under the control of the great Mughal Empire.

- The Tughlaq Empire in India was destroyed by Timur's invasion. The defeat of the Tughlaq dynasty was such a setback that it could not last long. Northern India was in shambles after Timur's invasion. Delhi was in ruins and almost deserted.
- Pestilence was caused by the dead bodies of the city's inhabitants polluting the city's air and water supply.
- Timur's invasion of the Subcontinent resulted in social, political, and economic inequality. Thousands of them had been ruthlessly murdered, and thousands more had become homeless.
- The invasion of Timur caused widespread anarchy in the country. Confusion reigned throughout the empire's provinces. Delhi was rendered immobile.
- Famine and pestilence were added horrors that killed men and cattle and caused agriculture to be suspended.
- Timur invaded northern India, during the reign of Sultan Nasiruddin Mahmud Shah Tughluq (who was the last ruler of the Tughlaq Dynasty) in 1398. Timur crossed River Indus on 30 September 1398. He massacred all the people of Tulamba (the first town which he encountered in his invasion). He advanced further and captured Multan in October. Throughout his invasion Timur was not opposed by any Indian nobility.

However, the Rajputs stepped up to fight Timur, but Timur pressed very hard and slaughtered every last one of the Rajputs at Bhatner. Before attacking Delhi, Timur was also attacked by the Jats who looted Timur's caravans and hid in the forests. Timur also killed many of them and even took some of them captive.

Timur finally reached Delhi in December and fought against the army of Nasiruddin Mahmud Tughlaq on 17th December 1398. Timur used his camels to fight the elephant army of Tughluq. He knew that the elephants could be easily frightened and he used this knowledge to make the elephants turn around and stampede their own soldiers. It was a relatively easy victory for Timur. Nasiruddin Mahmud Tughluq fled with the remaining people and Timur sacked Delhi and left it in ruins.

Timur's invasion of India in 1398 was a pivotal event in the history of the Delhi Sultanate and the Indian subcontinent. Timur, also known as Tamerlane, was a Turco-Mongol conqueror who sought to emulate the conquests of his ancestor, Genghis Khan. His invasion of India was motivated by the desire to plunder its wealth and expand his empire. Here is a detailed account of Timur's invasion:

Background

- Timur's Ambitions: Timur, who had already established a vast empire stretching from the Middle East to Central Asia, aimed to extend his influence further into South Asia. He was known for his military prowess and ruthlessness.
- Delhi Sultanate's Weakness: The Delhi Sultanate, under Sultan Nasir-ud-Din Mahmud Shah Tughlaq, was in a state of decline due to internal strife, economic instability, and administrative inefficiency. This made it vulnerable to external threats.

The Invasion

- Preparation and March: In 1398, Timur gathered a large army and prepared for his campaign into India. His forces were well-equipped and experienced, having already conquered vast territories in Central Asia and Persia.
- Crossing the Indus: Timur's army crossed the Indus River and advanced towards Delhi. They faced minimal resistance due to the weakened state of the Sultanate and the element of surprise.
- Battle of Delhi: On December 17, 1398, Timur's forces engaged the Sultanate's army near Delhi. Despite attempts by the Sultan's forces to defend the city, they were decisively defeated. Timur's superior tactics and the morale of his troops ensured a swift victory.
- Sack of Delhi: Following the battle, Timur's troops entered Delhi and unleashed a devastating massacre. The city was subjected to extensive plundering, and its population suffered immense atrocities. Historical accounts describe the streets of Delhi running with blood and the city being reduced to ruins.

Impact

- Destruction and Massacre: The invasion caused widespread destruction in Delhi. The city's infrastructure was heavily damaged, and a significant portion of its population was killed or displaced. The massacre and looting left Delhi in a state of chaos and despair.
- Economic Disruption: Timur's invasion disrupted trade and agriculture, leading to economic instability in the region. The plundering of wealth and resources further weakened the Delhi Sultanate's financial stability.
- Political Vacuum: The invasion left a power vacuum in the Delhi Sultanate. With the Sultanate's authority severely weakened, regional powers and local chieftains asserted their independence, leading to fragmentation and political instability.
- Precedent for Future Invasions: Timur's successful invasion set a precedent for future invasions by Central Asian conquerors. It demonstrated the vulnerability of the Indian subcontinent to external threats and influenced subsequent military strategies.

Aftermath

- Timur's Return: After plundering Delhi, Timur returned to his capital in Samarkand, taking with him immense wealth and thousands of captives. His departure left a shattered Delhi Sultanate struggling to recover.
- Rise of the Sayyid Dynasty: The weakened state of the Sultanate led to the rise of the Sayyid dynasty. Khizr Khan, a former governor under Timur, established the Sayyid dynasty in 1414, marking the beginning of a new chapter in the history of the Delhi Sultanate.
- Long-term Consequences: The long-term consequences of Timur's invasion included the further decline of the Tughlaq dynasty and the eventual rise of the Lodi dynasty. The invasion also highlighted the need for strong centralized authority and military preparedness in the face of external threats.

Conclusion

Timur's invasion of India in 1398 was a catastrophic event that left an indelible mark on the history of the Delhi Sultanate. The invasion not only caused immense destruction and loss of life but also exposed the vulnerabilities of the Sultanate. It set the stage for subsequent political changes and highlighted the need for stronger governance and defense mechanisms in medieval India. After Timur's attack, India had lost all of its finances and was on the verge of economic disaster. His army destroyed and burned standing crops, and the unattended dead bodies and destruction caused disease outbreaks and food shortages. The impact of his invasion was so powerful that no Tughlaq ruler ever regained the strength to reclaim the throne. The country was on the verge of collapse.

The Sayyid Dynasty (1414-1451 A.D.)

The Sayyid dynasty, ruling from 1414 to 1451, was a significant period in the history of the Delhi Sultanate, despite its relatively short duration. Following the devastating invasion of Timur in 1398, the Sayyid dynasty sought to stabilize and restore the Sultanate's authority. Here's a detailed overview of the Sayyid dynasty and its impact on medieval Indian history:

Establishment of the Sayyid Dynasty

Background:

- Timur's Invasion: Timur's invasion of Delhi in 1398 left the city and the Delhi Sultanate in ruins, causing a power vacuum and significant political instability.
- Post-Timur Period: The Delhi Sultanate struggled to maintain control over its territories, and various regional powers began to assert their independence.

Founding of the Dynasty:

- Khizr Khan: Khizr Khan, who had been appointed governor of Multan by Timur, took advantage of the weakened state of the Sultanate. He captured Delhi in 1414 and established the Sayyid dynasty. He did not assume the title of Sultan, ruling instead as a vassal of Timur and his successors.

Khizr Khan (1414- 1421 A.D.)

1. He was the founder of Sayyid Dynasty
2. He did not swear any royal title.
3. He was the Governor of Multan.
4. He took advantage of the disordered situation in India after Timur's invasion.
5. In 1414 A.D. he occupied the throne of Delhi.
6. He brought parts of Surat, Dilapur, and Punjab under his control.
7. But he lost Bengal, Deccan, Gujarat, Jaunpur, Khandesh and Malwa.
8. In 1421 he died.

9. Mubarak Shah Khizr Khan's son succeeded him.

Rule and Administration: Khizr Khan focused on consolidating power in Delhi and reasserting control over the Sultanate's territories. He faced challenges from regional chieftains and sought to stabilize the administration.

1. Military Campaigns: Khizr Khan conducted military campaigns to regain lost territories and protect the Sultanate from external threats. His efforts, however, were often hampered by limited resources and internal dissent.

Mubarak Shah (1421-1434 A.D.)

1. Mubarak Shah crushed the local chiefs of the Doab region and the Khokhars.
2. He is first Sultan ruler to appoint Hindu nobles in the court of Delhi.
3. He constructed "Mubarakbad" City on the banks of the river Jamuna.
4. Muhammad Shah Mubarak's nephew succeeded him.

Challenges and Reforms: Mubarak Shah, Khizr Khan's son, dealt with numerous rebellions and external threats. He implemented administrative reforms to improve governance and stabilize the Sultanate.

1. Military Struggles: Despite his efforts, Mubarak Shah faced continuous challenges from regional powers and internal factions, which limited his ability to expand the Sultanate's influence.

Muhammad Shah (1434-1445 A.D.)

1. He defeated the ruler of Malwa with the help of Bahlul Lodi the Governor of Lahore.
2. He conferred Bahlul Lodi with the title Khan-i-Khanan for help in defeating the ruler of Malwa.
3. Later Ala-ud-din Shah succeeded him.

Relative Stability: Muhammad Shah's reign was marked by relative peace and consolidation. He focused on maintaining control over the core territories of the Sultanate.

1. Opposition and Limitations: His reign saw opposition from nobles and regional chieftains, which prevented significant territorial expansion.

Ala-ud-din Shah (1445-1457 A.D.)

1. He was not a strong ruler.
2. Ala-ud-din Shah was removed from the throne by Bahlul Lodi in 1457 A.D. by Bahlul Lodi who was the Governor of Lahore. Delhi was captured by him and he was sent to Badaun.
3. Ala-ud-din Shah died in Badaun in 1478 A.D.

□ Decline and Abdication: Ala-ud-Din Alam Shah was the last ruler of the Sayyid dynasty. His reign witnessed further decline in the Sultanate's power and influence.

1. □ Transition to Lodi Dynasty: In 1451, Ala-ud-Din Alam Shah abdicated the throne in favor of Bahlul Lodi, marking the end of the Sayyid dynasty and the beginning of the Lodi dynasty.

Impact on Medieval Indian History

Political Fragmentation:

- Decentralization: The Sayyid dynasty's rule was characterized by political fragmentation and decentralization. The central authority of the Sultanate weakened, and regional powers gained significant autonomy.
- Rise of Regional States: The weakening of the Delhi Sultanate under the Sayyid dynasty led to the rise of regional states and kingdoms, which asserted their independence and expanded their influence.

Administrative Changes:

- Reforms: Despite the challenges, the Sayyid rulers attempted various administrative reforms to improve governance and stabilize the Sultanate. These efforts laid the groundwork for future administrative practices in the region.
- Continuity and Change: The administrative structures established during the Sayyid period continued to influence the governance of subsequent dynasties, including the Lodi dynasty.

Cultural and Social Impact:

- Urban Development: The Sayyid rulers invested in rebuilding and developing Delhi, which had been devastated by Timur's invasion. This period saw efforts to revive the city's infrastructure and economy.
- Religious Patronage: The Sayyid dynasty continued the tradition of patronizing religious and cultural institutions. They supported the construction of mosques, madrasas, and other religious buildings.

Legacy:

- Transition Period: The Sayyid dynasty served as a transitional period between the Tughlaq dynasty and the Lodi dynasty. It played a crucial role in stabilizing the region after Timur's invasion and setting the stage for future political developments.
- Historical Significance: Although the Sayyid dynasty's rule was relatively short and marked by challenges, it contributed to the continuity of the Delhi Sultanate and influenced the political and administrative landscape of medieval India.

In conclusion, the Sayyid dynasty's rule from 1414 to 1451 was a period of recovery and transition for the Delhi Sultanate. Despite facing significant challenges, the Sayyid rulers made efforts to stabilize the Sultanate and rebuild its institutions. Their reign left a lasting impact on the political and administrative structures of medieval India, paving the way for the subsequent Lodi dynasty.

The Lodi dynasty was an Afghan dynasty that ruled the Delhi Sultanate from 1451 to 1526. It was the fifth and final dynasty of the Delhi Sultanate, founded by Bahlul Khan Lodi when he replaced the Sayyid dynasty. The dynasty ruled what is sometimes referred to as the "First Indo-Afghan Empire". In this article, we will discuss the Lodi Dynasty

Lodi Dynasty - Background

- The Afghan Ghizali tribe founded the Lodi Empire. Bahlol Lodi acted wisely and took advantage of Sayyed ruler's weak position by further capturing Punjab before entering Delhi.
- In 1451, he seized control of India from the throne of Delhi, assuming the title "Bahlol Shah Ghazi." His accession ended the Sharqi dynasty.
- On July 15, 1489, Bahlol Lodhi was succeeded by his second son Sikander Lodhi, who was engaged in a power struggle with his elder brother Barbak Shah.
- Sikandar Lodhi was a fanatical Sunni ruler who destroyed Indian temples in Mathura and Naga Port. He imposed Jaziya on Hindus in order to demonstrate Islam's supremacy.
- Sikandar Lodi attempted to conquer Gwalior fort five times but was defeated each time by Raja Man Singh.
- After a succession war with his elder brother Jalal-ud-Din, he died in 1517 and was succeeded by his son, Ibrahim Khan Lodi. They were constantly at odds

Rulers of Lodi Dynasty

Bahlul Lodi (1451-1489 AD)

- Bahlul Khan Lodi (r. 1451–1489) was the nephew and son-in-law of Malik Sultan Shah Lodi, the governor of Sirhind in (Punjab), India, and succeeded him as governor during the reign of Sayyid dynasty ruler Muhammad Shah.
- Muhammad Shah elevated him to the position of Tarun-Bin-Sultan. With his strong personality, he held together a loose confederacy of Afghan and Turkish chiefs.
- He brought the provinces' fractious chiefs to heel and injected new life into the government.
- Bahlul Khan Lodi ascended the throne of the Delhi sultanate on April 19, 1451, after the last Sayyid ruler of Delhi, Alauddin Alam Shah, voluntarily abdicated in his favour.
- The conquest of Jaunpur was the most significant event during his reign. Bahlul spent most of his time fighting against the Sharqi dynasty, which he eventually annexed.
- In 1486, he elevated his eldest surviving son Barbak to the throne of Jaunpur.

Sikandar Lodi (1489-1517 AD)

- Sikandar Khan Lodi (r. 1489–1517) (born Nizam Khan), Bahlul's second son, succeeded him after his death on 17 July 1489 and assumed the title Sikandar Shah.
- His father nominated him to succeed him and he was crowned Sultan on July 15, 1489. He founded Agra in 1504 and built mosques.

- He relocated the capital from Delhi to Agra. He was a supporter of trade and commerce. He was a renowned poet who wrote under the pen name Gulruk.
- He was also a patron of learning and had Sanskrit medical works translated into Persian.
- He curbed the individualistic tendencies of his Pashtun nobles by requiring them to submit their accounts to state audit.
- As a result, he was able to instil vigour and discipline in the administration. His most notable achievement was the conquest and annexation of Bihar.

Ibrahim Lodi

- The last Lodi Sultan of Delhi was Ibrahim Lodi (r. 1517–1526), Sikandar's eldest son. He possessed the qualities of a great warrior, but his decisions and actions were rash and impolitic.
- His attempt at royal absolutism was premature, and his policy of repression without measures to strengthen the administration and increase military resources was bound to fail.
- Ibrahim faced numerous rebellions and kept the opposition at bay for nearly a decade.
- For the majority of his reign, he was at war with the Afghans and the Mughal Empire, and he died trying to save the Lodi Dynasty from annihilation.
- In 1526, Ibrahim was defeated at the Battle of Panipat. This marked the end of the Lodi Dynasty and the rise of Babur's (r. 1526–1530) Mughal Empire in India.

Administration of Lodi Dynasty

- Sultan Sikandar Lodi is also credited with establishing a sound administrative apparatus.
- He instituted auditing to check the accounts of muqtas and walis (governors). Mubarak Khan Lodi (Tuji Khail), the governor of Jaunpur, was the first nobleman to have his accounts scrutinised in 1506.
- He was convicted of embezzlement and thus fired. Khwaja Asghar, a non-Afghan officer-in-charge in Delhi, was similarly imprisoned for corruption.
- In order to keep himself informed about the state of the Empire, the Sultan reorganised the intelligence system.
- As a result, the nobles were afraid to discuss political issues amongst themselves for fear of upsetting the Sultan.
- Concerned about the general public's well-being, the Sultan established charity houses in both the capital and the provinces for the benefit of the poor and handicapped. These charitable organisations provided financial assistance to deserving people.
- Scholars and poets were patronised, and educational institutions received financial support throughout the Empire. He forbade the use of any language other than Persian in government offices.
- This motivated many Hindus to learn Persian, and they became fluent in the language in a short period of time.
- As a result, they began to manage and supervise the revenue administration.
- When Babur arrived in India, he was astounded to see that the revenue department was entirely staffed by Hindus.
- Sultan Sikandar Lodi had keen interest in ensuring impartial justice for all. His efforts resulted in peace and prosperity throughout the Empire.

Economy of Lodi Dynasty

- Sikandar Lodhi is historically known as a true fanatical Sunni ruler who destroyed Indian temples in Mathura and Naga Port.
- He imposed Jaziya on Hindus to demonstrate Islam's superiority.
- He introduced the 32-digit Gaz-i-Sikandiri, which assisted farmers in measuring their cultivated fields.
- In 1504, he founded the city of Agra and built magnificent tombs and buildings.
- He was instrumental in facilitating imports and exports and growing the economy.
- Farmers are being exempted from food grain taxes.
- Education promotion Sikandar was a staunch Sunni ruler who lacked religious tolerance.

Religion and Architecture of Lodi Dynasty

- The Lodhi Sultans, like their predecessors, stylized themselves as deputies of the Abbasid Caliphs, recognising the authority of a united Caliphate over the Muslim World.
- They gave cash stipends and revenue-free lands (including entire villages) to Muslim ulama, Sufi shaikhs, Muhammad's claimed descendants, and members of his Quraysh tribe.
- The Lodis' Muslim subjects were required to pay the zakat tax for religious merit, while non-Muslims were required to pay the jizya tax in order to receive state protection.
- Hindus were required to pay an additional pilgrimage tax in some parts of the Sultanate. Nonetheless, several Hindu officers worked in the Sultanate's revenue administration.
- Sikandar Lodi, whose mother was Hindu, used strict Sunni orthodoxy to demonstrate his Islamic credentials as a political ploy.
- He destroyed Hindu temples and, under ulama pressure, allowed the execution of a Brahman who declared Hinduism to be as true as Islam.
- He also prohibited women from visiting Muslim saints' mazars (mausoleums) and prohibited the annual procession of the spear of the legendary Muslim martyr Salar Masud.
- He also established Sharia courts in several towns with a sizable Muslim population, allowing the qazis to apply Islamic law to both Muslim and non-Muslim subjects.
- The Bara Gumbad in Delhi's Lodhi Gardens is believed to have the earliest constructed full dome of any building in Delhi, having been built in 1490 CE, most likely by Sikandar Lodi.
- The Shish Gumbad, a Lodhi Dynasty tomb built between 1489 and 1517 CE.
- Sikandar Lodi constructed the Rajon ki Baoli stepwell in 1516.

Decline of Lodi Dynasty

- By the time Ibrahim ascended to the throne, the Lodi Dynasty's political structure had crumbled due to abandoned trade routes and a depleted treasury.
- The Deccan was a coastal trade route, but by the late fifteenth century, the supply lines had failed.
- The decline and eventual failure of this specific trade route cut off supplies from the coast to the interior, where the Lodi empire resided.

- The Lodi Dynasty was unable to protect itself if warfare broke out on trade route roads; as a result, they did not use those trade routes, and their trade and treasury declined, leaving them vulnerable to internal political problems.
- In order to avenge Ibrahim's insults, the governor of Lahore, Daulat Khan Lodi, requested that the ruler of Kabul, Babur, invade his kingdom. Ibrahim Lodi was thus killed in a battle with Babur.
- The Lodi dynasty ended with Ibrahim Lodi's death.

The Lodi dynasty, which ruled over the Delhi Sultanate from 1451 to 1526, marked the final phase of the Sultanate before the advent of the Mughal Empire. The Lodi rulers, particularly Bahlul Lodi, Sikandar Lodi, and Ibrahim Lodi, made significant contributions to the fields of art, architecture, and economy. Here's a comprehensive examination of these contributions:

Art and Architecture

Architectural Innovations and Styles

The Lodi dynasty's architectural style represented a transition from the earlier Sultanate architecture to what would later influence Mughal architecture. Key features of Lodi architecture include the use of domes, arches, and intricate ornamental designs.

1. Tomb Architecture:

- Lodi Gardens: The Lodi Gardens in Delhi are perhaps the most prominent surviving examples of Lodi architecture. The garden complex houses the tombs of several Lodi rulers, including Muhammad Shah and Sikandar Lodi.
- Sikandar Lodi's Tomb: Built in 1517, this tomb is a notable example of the architectural finesse of the Lodi period. It is characterized by its octagonal shape, high walls, and impressive domed structure, reflecting a blend of Islamic and Indian architectural styles.
- Shish Gumbad and Bara Gumbad: Located in the Lodi Gardens, these tombs exhibit the distinctive features of Lodi architecture, such as the use of double domes and intricate carvings.

2. Mosques:

- Jami Masjid, Panipat: Built during the reign of Bahlul Lodi, this mosque showcases the architectural evolution towards the more monumental and expansive styles that would later define Mughal architecture.
- Moth Ki Masjid: Constructed by Sikandar Lodi's prime minister, this mosque is an example of the grand scale and elaborate design typical of Lodi religious architecture.

3. Secular Buildings:

- The Lodi period saw the construction of various fortifications, gateways, and public buildings. These structures were designed with both aesthetic appeal and defensive functionality in mind.

Artistic Elements

1. Ornamentation:

- The Lodi architecture is noted for its use of blue tiles, calligraphy, and geometrical patterns. These elements not only served decorative purposes but also reflected the cultural and religious influences of the period.

2. Structural Features:

- Double Domes: A significant architectural innovation during the Lodi period was the introduction of double domes. This technique involved creating a space between the interior and exterior domes, which improved the acoustics and provided better structural stability.
- Vaulted Ceilings and Arches: The use of vaulted ceilings and arches was prominent in Lodi architecture. These features allowed for larger and more open interior spaces, contributing to the grandeur of their buildings.

Regional Influences

1. Delhi: As the capital, Delhi saw the most significant architectural contributions from the Lodi rulers. The city's landscape was dotted with tombs, mosques, and other structures that reflected the dynasty's architectural preferences.
2. Punjab and Uttar Pradesh: The influence of Lodi architecture extended to regions like Punjab and Uttar Pradesh, where several monuments and buildings from this period can still be found.

Economy

Agricultural Developments

The Lodi rulers placed a strong emphasis on agriculture, recognizing it as the backbone of the economy.

1. Irrigation:

- Canals and Wells: The construction and maintenance of canals and wells were prioritized to ensure a reliable water supply for agriculture. This helped in enhancing agricultural productivity and stabilizing the rural economy.
- Land Reclamation: Efforts were made to reclaim and cultivate arable land, which increased the area available for agriculture and contributed to economic stability.

2. Crop Diversity:

- The Lodi period saw the cultivation of a variety of crops, including grains, pulses, fruits, and vegetables. This diversity helped in ensuring food security and supporting the population's nutritional needs.

Trade and Commerce

The Lodi dynasty fostered trade and commerce, recognizing the importance of these activities for economic prosperity.

1. Domestic Trade:

- Market Reforms: Sikandar Lodi introduced market reforms to regulate prices and ensure the availability of essential commodities. This helped in maintaining economic stability and preventing exploitation by traders and merchants.
- Urban Centers: The growth of urban centers under the Lodi rulers provided hubs for trade and commerce. Cities like Delhi, Agra, and Panipat became important commercial centers during this period.

2. International Trade:

- Trade Routes: The Lodi dynasty maintained and protected trade routes that connected India with Central Asia, the Middle East, and Southeast Asia. These routes facilitated the exchange of goods, culture, and technology.
- Export Goods: India exported a variety of goods, including textiles, spices, precious stones, and crafts. These exports played a crucial role in bringing wealth into the kingdom.

Economic Policies and Administration

1. Revenue Collection:

- Land Revenue System: The Lodi rulers implemented an efficient land revenue system to ensure the collection of taxes from agricultural produce. This system was designed to be fair and systematic, helping to stabilize the state's finances.
- Taxation Policies: Efforts were made to streamline taxation policies to reduce the burden on peasants while ensuring a steady flow of revenue to the state.

2. Currency and Trade Regulations:

- Standardization of Currency: The Lodi rulers worked towards standardizing the currency, which facilitated trade and commerce by ensuring the reliability and uniformity of monetary transactions.
- Regulation of Trade Practices: Measures were taken to regulate trade practices to prevent fraud and ensure fair trading conditions. This included monitoring weights and measures and overseeing market activities.

Social and Cultural Impact

Patronage of Arts and Literature

1. Literary Contributions:

- The Lodi rulers were patrons of literature, and their courts attracted poets, scholars, and writers. Persian was the court language, and many notable works of literature were produced during this period.
- Religious Texts and Poetry: Religious texts and poetry flourished under the Lodi patronage, reflecting the cultural and intellectual environment of the time.

2. Cultural Synthesis:

- The Lodi period witnessed a synthesis of various cultural influences, including Persian, Turkish, and Indian traditions. This blend was reflected in the art, architecture, and cultural practices of the time.

Social Structures and Administration

1. Nobility and Bureaucracy:

- The Lodi rulers maintained a hierarchical structure of nobility and bureaucracy to administer their territories. This system was crucial for maintaining order and implementing the policies of the state.
- Land Grants: The practice of granting land to nobles and officials in return for military and administrative services was prevalent. This helped in consolidating the rulers' control over their territories.

2. Law and Order:

- Efforts were made to maintain law and order through a structured legal system. This included the appointment of judges and officials to oversee the administration of justice.

Conclusion

The Lodi dynasty, through its contributions to art, architecture, and the economy, played a crucial role in shaping the medieval history of India. Their architectural innovations, such as the use of double domes and intricate ornamentation, left a lasting legacy that influenced subsequent architectural styles, including that of the Mughal Empire. The Lodi rulers' emphasis on agriculture, trade, and economic reforms helped stabilize the Sultanate's economy and facilitated prosperity.

Despite the challenges they faced, the Lodi rulers managed to create a cultural and economic environment that fostered growth and development. Their efforts in rebuilding and developing Delhi, promoting trade and commerce, and supporting the arts and literature were significant in maintaining the cultural and economic vitality of the Delhi Sultanate during their reign.

The Mongol Invasions of India

The Mongol invasions of the 13th and 14th centuries had a profound impact on various parts of the world, including the Indian subcontinent. The Mongols, under the leadership of Genghis Khan and his successors, created one of the largest empires in history, extending from Eastern Europe to Asia. Their invasions and the resulting interactions significantly influenced the political, economic, social, and cultural landscapes of the regions they conquered or affected.

Initial Encounters

1. Early Raids: The first significant encounter between the Mongols and the Indian subcontinent occurred in 1221, when Genghis Khan pursued the Khwarazmian prince Jalal ad-Din into the Indus Valley. This marked the beginning of intermittent Mongol incursions into the region.

2. Continued Raids: Over the next few decades, the Mongols conducted several raids into the northern parts of India, targeting key cities and regions such as Lahore, Multan, and the Punjab area.

Major Mongol Invasions

1. Invasion during the Reign of Alauddin Khalji (1296-1316):
 - Defensive Measures: Alauddin Khalji, the Sultan of Delhi, implemented significant defensive measures to protect his kingdom from Mongol invasions. He strengthened fortifications, maintained a large standing army, and developed an efficient espionage system.
 - Battles and Sieges: The Mongols launched several invasions during Alauddin Khalji's reign, leading to fierce battles and sieges. Notably, in 1299, a large Mongol force besieged Delhi but was ultimately repelled.
2. Invasion during the Reign of Muhammad bin Tughlaq (1325-1351):
 - Repeated Incursions: The Mongols continued their incursions during the reign of Muhammad bin Tughlaq. These invasions strained the Sultanate's resources and led to significant disruptions in the affected regions.
 - Military Responses: Muhammad bin Tughlaq employed various military strategies to counter the Mongol threat, including fortifying cities, mobilizing troops, and launching counterattacks.

Impact of the Mongol Invasions

Political Impact

1. Strengthening of Central Authority: The persistent threat of Mongol invasions compelled the rulers of the Delhi Sultanate to strengthen central authority and military preparedness. This included the establishment of a more centralized administrative structure and the enhancement of military capabilities.
2. Military Reforms: The invasions prompted significant military reforms, including the recruitment of larger standing armies, improvements in fortifications, and the development of advanced military strategies. The emphasis on a robust military apparatus became a defining feature of the Sultanate's rule.

Economic Impact

1. Economic Disruption: The Mongol invasions led to widespread economic disruption, particularly in the northern regions of India. Agricultural production, trade, and commerce were adversely affected due to the destruction caused by the invasions.
2. Taxation and Revenue Policies: In response to the economic challenges posed by the invasions, rulers such as Alauddin Khalji implemented stringent taxation and revenue policies. These measures aimed to secure sufficient resources for defense and to rebuild the economy.

Social and Cultural Impact

1. Demographic Changes: The invasions caused significant demographic changes, including population displacement and loss of life. Many people fled the affected areas, leading to shifts in population distribution.
2. Cultural Exchange: Despite the destructive nature of the invasions, there were instances of cultural exchange between the Mongols and the local populations. This included the introduction of new military tactics, technologies, and, to some extent, artistic and cultural influences.

Long-term Consequences

1. Defensive Architecture: The need to defend against Mongol invasions led to the development of advanced defensive architecture. This included the construction of formidable forts, fortified cities, and defensive walls, which became characteristic of the period.
2. Influence on Regional Powers: The Mongol threat influenced the policies and strategies of regional powers in India. This included the establishment of alliances, military collaborations, and the adoption of defensive measures to protect their territories.

Psychological Impact

1. Perception of External Threats: The repeated Mongol invasions left a lasting psychological impact on the rulers and the population of the Indian subcontinent. The perception of an ever-present external threat influenced the political and military strategies of subsequent rulers.
2. Legacy of Resilience: The ability of the Delhi Sultanate to withstand and repel multiple Mongol invasions contributed to a legacy of resilience and military prowess. This legacy influenced the identity and self-perception of the Sultanate and its successors.

Conclusion

The Mongol invasions of the Indian subcontinent were a significant historical event with far-reaching consequences. Politically, they led to the strengthening of central authority and military reforms. Economically, they caused disruptions and necessitated stringent revenue policies. Socially and culturally, they resulted in demographic changes and instances of cultural exchange. The invasions left a lasting legacy of resilience and influenced the political, military, and architectural developments of the period.

The ability of the Delhi Sultanate to resist the Mongol threat, despite the challenges, demonstrated the strategic acumen and military capabilities of its rulers. The impact of the Mongol invasions on medieval India underscores the complex interplay between conflict, adaptation, and resilience in the face of external threats.

The Vijayanagara Empire, established in 1336 by Harihara I and his brother Bukka Raya I, was a significant South Indian empire that played a crucial role in the history of the subcontinent. Spanning over three centuries, it stood as a bulwark against invasions from the north, promoted Hindu culture, and fostered economic prosperity and cultural development. Here is an in-depth exploration of the Vijayanagara Empire, covering its origins, administration, economy, culture, and legacy.

Origins and Early History

Founding of the Empire

1. Harihara I and Bukka Raya I:

- The founders of the Vijayanagara Empire were initially part of the Kakatiya and Kampili kingdoms. Following the defeat of the Kampili kingdom by the Delhi Sultanate, the brothers were taken prisoner and later converted to Islam. They eventually reconverted to Hinduism under the guidance of the sage Vidyaranya and established the Vijayanagara Empire in 1336.

2. Motivation and Objectives:

- The primary objective behind the establishment of the Vijayanagara Empire was to resist Islamic invasions from the north, protect Hindu dharma, and restore regional stability and prosperity.

Early Expansion

1. Consolidation of Power:

- The early rulers focused on consolidating their power in the Deccan region. They extended their control over parts of Karnataka, Andhra Pradesh, and Tamil Nadu, establishing the foundation for a powerful empire.

2. Conflict with the Bahmani Sultanate:

- The empire frequently clashed with the Bahmani Sultanate, a major contemporary power in the Deccan. These conflicts, known as the Deccan Wars, were primarily over control of fertile lands and strategic locations.

Administration and Governance

Administrative Structure

1. Centralized Governance:

- The Vijayanagara Empire had a highly centralized administrative structure with the king at the top. The king was considered the ultimate authority in both political and religious matters.

2. Provinces and Local Administration:

- The empire was divided into provinces known as rajya or mandala, each governed by a governor or viceroy appointed by the king. These provinces were further subdivided into nadu (districts) and grama (villages), ensuring efficient local administration.

Military Organization

1. Standing Army:

- The Vijayanagara Empire maintained a large and well-trained standing army. This included infantry, cavalry, and war elephants, which were crucial in both defensive and offensive operations.

2. Fortifications:

- The empire invested heavily in fortifications and military infrastructure. The capital city, Vijayanagara (modern-day Hampi), was surrounded by massive walls and strategically designed to withstand prolonged sieges.

Judicial and Revenue Systems

1. Judicial System:

- The judicial system was based on Hindu law, with local chieftains and village councils handling minor disputes, while more serious cases were referred to the king or his appointed officials.

2. Revenue Collection:

- The empire had an efficient revenue collection system, primarily based on land taxes. The state also generated revenue from trade, commerce, and tribute from vassal states.

Economy

Agriculture and Irrigation

1. Agricultural Economy:

- Agriculture was the backbone of the Vijayanagara economy. The empire's fertile lands supported the cultivation of a variety of crops, including rice, millet, and cotton.

2. Irrigation Systems:

- The rulers implemented advanced irrigation systems, including tanks, canals, and wells, to support agriculture. These systems helped mitigate the effects of droughts and ensured stable agricultural production.

Trade and Commerce

1. Internal Trade:

- The empire's extensive network of roads facilitated internal trade, connecting various regions and promoting the exchange of goods and services.
- 2. External Trade:
 - The Vijayanagara Empire engaged in significant maritime trade with foreign countries, including Persia, the Arab world, Southeast Asia, and China. Key export items included spices, textiles, and precious stones.

Urbanization and Craft Industries

1. Urban Centers:
 - The empire saw the development of several urban centers, with Vijayanagara (Hampi) being the most prominent. These cities were hubs of economic activity, attracting merchants, artisans, and scholars.
2. Craft Industries:
 - Craft industries flourished, producing textiles, jewelry, metalwork, and other goods. The state actively supported these industries, recognizing their importance to the economy.

Culture

Religion and Philosophy

1. Hindu Revivalism:
 - The Vijayanagara rulers were staunch patrons of Hinduism. They promoted the construction of temples, supported religious scholars, and revived ancient Vedic traditions.
2. Religious Tolerance:
 - Despite their emphasis on Hinduism, the rulers of Vijayanagara were known for their religious tolerance. They supported Jain and Buddhist institutions and allowed the practice of various faiths within their realm.

Art and Architecture

1. Temple Architecture:
 - The empire is renowned for its distinctive temple architecture, characterized by elaborate carvings, towering gopurams (gateway towers), and intricate sculptures. Notable examples include the Virupaksha Temple and the Vittala Temple in Hampi.
2. Literature and Music:
 - The Vijayanagara period witnessed a flourishing of literature in languages such as Sanskrit, Kannada, Telugu, and Tamil. The court supported poets, writers, and musicians, contributing to a vibrant cultural milieu.

Legacy and Decline

Decline of the Empire

1. Battle of Talikota (1565):
 - The decisive Battle of Talikota marked the beginning of the decline of the Vijayanagara Empire. A coalition of Deccan Sultanates defeated the Vijayanagara forces, leading to the sacking of the capital and a significant loss of power.

2. Fragmentation and Internal Strife:

- Following the battle, the empire fragmented into smaller states, and internal strife weakened its ability to maintain a unified front against external threats.

Legacy

1. Cultural Contributions:

- The Vijayanagara Empire left a lasting legacy through its contributions to art, architecture, and literature. The architectural marvels of Hampi continue to attract scholars and tourists, highlighting the empire's cultural achievements.

2. Economic and Administrative Innovations:

- The empire's economic policies and administrative practices influenced subsequent South Indian kingdoms. The emphasis on irrigation, trade, and efficient governance became models for future states.

3. Historical Significance:

- The Vijayanagara Empire is remembered as a bastion of Hindu culture during a period of significant Islamic expansion in India. It played a crucial role in preserving and promoting Hindu traditions and served as a symbol of resistance against northern invasions.

Conclusion

The Vijayanagara Empire stands as a testament to the resilience and creativity of the South Indian civilization during the medieval period. Krishnadevaraya, one of the most celebrated rulers of the Vijayanagara Empire, reigned from 1509 to 1529. His period of rule is often considered the golden age of the empire, marked by military conquests, administrative reforms, economic prosperity, and cultural flourishing. Here's an in-depth exploration of Krishnadevaraya's contributions and the impact of his reign.

Early Life and Ascension to the Throne

Background and Early Life

1. Dynastic Background:

- Krishnadevaraya belonged to the Tuluva dynasty, the third dynasty to rule the Vijayanagara Empire. His father, Narasa Nayaka, was a successful military commander and regent who played a crucial role in stabilizing the empire during turbulent times.

2. Education and Training:

- Krishnadevaraya received extensive training in administration, military tactics, and the arts, preparing him for his future role as a ruler.

Ascension to the Throne

1. Succession:

- Following the death of his brother, Vira Narasimha Raya, Krishnadevaraya ascended the throne in 1509. His rise to power was supported by key military and administrative figures in the empire.

Military Achievements

Expansion and Consolidation

1. Conquests in the Deccan:

- Krishnadevaraya embarked on a series of military campaigns to expand and consolidate the empire. He defeated the Bahmani Sultanate and its successor states, including Bijapur, Golconda, and Ahmednagar, securing significant territories in the Deccan.

2. Campaign against the Gajapatis:

- One of his notable campaigns was against the Gajapati kingdom of Odisha. Krishnadevaraya successfully captured key forts and territories, extending the empire's influence into eastern India.

Key Battles

1. Battle of Raichur (1520):

- The Battle of Raichur was one of Krishnadevaraya's most significant military achievements. He decisively defeated the Sultan of Bijapur, capturing the strategic fort of Raichur, which was a contested territory between the two kingdoms.

2. Diplomatic Alliances:

- Krishnadevaraya also skillfully used diplomacy to secure alliances with neighboring states, ensuring the stability and security of his empire.

Administrative Reforms

Governance and Administration

1. Centralized Administration:

- Krishnadevaraya strengthened the centralized administrative structure of the Vijayanagara Empire. He implemented efficient governance practices, appointing capable officials to key positions and ensuring accountability.
2. Provincial Administration:
 - He reorganized the provincial administration, dividing the empire into manageable units and appointing governors to oversee them. This helped in maintaining effective control over the vast territories.

Revenue and Taxation

1. Land Revenue System:
 - Krishnadevaraya introduced reforms in the land revenue system, ensuring fair assessment and collection of taxes. He emphasized the importance of accurate land measurement and documentation.
2. Agricultural Development:
 - He promoted agricultural development by encouraging the construction of irrigation works, such as tanks and canals, which enhanced agricultural productivity and ensured food security.

Economic Prosperity

1. Internal Trade:
 - Krishnadevaraya's reign saw a significant boost in internal trade. The construction of roads and market towns facilitated the movement of goods and promoted economic integration within the empire.
2. Maritime Trade:
 - The empire engaged in extensive maritime trade with foreign countries, including Persia, the Arab world, Southeast Asia, and China. The ports of the Vijayanagara Empire, such as Bhatkal and Mangalore, became bustling centers of commerce.

Urbanization and Industry

1. Urban Development:
 - The capital city of Vijayanagara (Hampi) flourished under Krishnadevaraya's rule. The city was known for its impressive architecture, bustling markets, and vibrant cultural life.
2. Crafts and Industries:
 - Various craft industries, including textiles, metalwork, and jewelry, thrived during his reign. The state's support for artisans and craftsmen contributed to economic prosperity and cultural richness.

Cultural Flourishing

Patronage of Arts and Literature

1. Literature:

- Krishnadevaraya was a great patron of literature. He himself was a poet and scholar, composing works such as the Telugu epic "Amuktamalyada." His court was adorned with renowned poets and scholars, including the Ashtadiggajas (eight great poets), who made significant contributions to Telugu literature.
- 2. Sanskrit and Other Languages:
- Apart from Telugu, he also patronized works in Sanskrit, Kannada, and Tamil, promoting a multi-lingual literary culture in his empire.

Architecture and Sculpture

- 1. Temple Construction:
- Krishnadevaraya commissioned the construction of numerous temples, contributing to the architectural splendor of the Vijayanagara Empire. Notable examples include the Vithala Temple and the Hazara Rama Temple in Hampi, known for their intricate carvings and grand designs.
- 2. Public Works:
- His reign also saw the construction of various public works, including tanks, canals, and roads, which not only facilitated economic activities but also showcased the empire's engineering prowess.

Religious and Social Policies

Religious Patronage

Legacy

End of His Reign

- 1. Succession:

- Krishnadevaraya's reign ended in 1529. His death marked the beginning of a period of instability and succession struggles within the empire, which eventually contributed to its decline.
2. Successors:
- His successors, including Achyuta Deva Raya and Sadashiva Raya, were unable to maintain the same level of control and prosperity, leading to the gradual weakening of the empire.

Historical Significance

1. Golden Age of Vijayanagara:
 - Krishnadevaraya's reign is often referred to as the golden age of the Vijayanagara Empire due to the remarkable achievements in military conquests, administration, economic prosperity, and cultural patronage.
2. Cultural Contributions:
 - The cultural and architectural achievements of his reign, particularly in the fields of literature and temple architecture, left an enduring legacy that continues to be celebrated and studied.
3. Symbol of Hindu Resistance:
 - His reign is also seen as a symbol of Hindu resistance and resurgence during a period of significant Islamic influence in the Indian subcontinent. His efforts to protect and promote Hindu culture had a lasting impact on the region's history and heritage.

Conclusion

Krishnadevaraya was a ruler of exceptional vision, military prowess, and administrative acumen. His reign not only marked the zenith of the Vijayanagara Empire but also left an indelible mark on South Indian history and culture. Through his military conquests, administrative reforms, economic initiatives, and cultural patronage, Krishnadevaraya ensured that the Vijayanagara Empire remained a beacon of prosperity, cultural richness, and religious tolerance. His legacy continues to be revered, and his contributions are remembered as foundational to the history of South India.

Bahmani Kingdom

The Bahmani Kingdom, also known as the Bahmani Sultanate, was a prominent medieval Indian state that emerged in the Deccan region. It was established in 1347 by Ala-ud-Din Bahman Shah after he revolted against the Delhi Sultanate. The Bahmani Kingdom played a significant role in the history of the Deccan, fostering cultural and architectural achievements while engaging in constant conflict with neighboring states.

Origins and Establishment

Founding of the Bahmani Kingdom

1. Rebellion against the Delhi Sultanate:
 - The Bahmani Kingdom was founded as a result of a rebellion against the Delhi Sultanate. Ala-ud-Din Bahman Shah, originally known as Zafar Khan, led this rebellion and declared independence in 1347.

2. Capital and Initial Expansion:

- The initial capital of the Bahmani Kingdom was Gulbarga (modern-day Kalaburagi) in Karnataka. The kingdom rapidly expanded its territory, establishing control over significant parts of the Deccan plateau.

Ala-ud-Din Bahman Shah

1. Background:

- Ala-ud-Din Bahman Shah was a former governor under the Delhi Sultanate. He leveraged his administrative and military experience to establish a stable and prosperous kingdom.

2. Legacy:

- His reign set the foundation for the Bahmani Sultanate, focusing on consolidating power, building administrative structures, and fostering cultural integration.

Ala-ud-Din Bahman Shah, also known as Hasan Gangu, was the founder and first ruler of the Bahmani Sultanate. His reign marked the beginning of the Bahmani dynasty and the establishment of a powerful Muslim kingdom in the Deccan region of southern India. Here is an overview of Ala-ud-Din Bahman Shah's life, achievements, and contributions:

Early Life and Background

1. Origins:

- Ala-ud-Din Bahman Shah was born as Hasan Gangu in the early 14th century. His exact date of birth and early life details are not well-documented.

2. Slave Origin:

- Hasan Gangu was originally a Hindu merchant or a slave (ghanz) in the service of the Kakatiya dynasty of Warangal, which ruled parts of present-day Telangana and Andhra Pradesh.

Rise to Power and Establishment of the Bahmani Sultanate

1. Rebellion against the Delhi Sultanate:

- Hasan Gangu rose to prominence during the decline of the Delhi Sultanate's authority in the Deccan region. Taking advantage of the weakening central authority, he rebelled against the Delhi Sultanate's rule.

2. Declaration of Independence:

- After successfully asserting his authority over the Deccan territories, Hasan Gangu declared himself independent and assumed the title of Ala-ud-Din Bahman Shah in 1347.

3. Establishment of the Bahmani Sultanate:

- Ala-ud-Din Bahman Shah founded the Bahmani Sultanate with Gulbarga (now Kalaburagi) as its capital. He established a strong administrative framework and consolidated his rule over the newly formed kingdom.

Contributions and Achievements

1. Centralized Administration:

- Bahman Shah implemented a centralized administrative system with himself as the supreme authority. He established efficient governance structures and appointed trusted officials to key administrative positions.
- 2. Expansion and Consolidation:
 - Under his rule, the Bahmani Sultanate expanded its territories through conquests and diplomacy. Bahman Shah successfully subdued local Hindu rulers and integrated their territories into his kingdom.
- 3. Promotion of Islam:
 - As a Muslim ruler, Bahman Shah promoted Islam in his kingdom. He patronized Islamic scholars, built mosques, and encouraged the spread of Islamic teachings.
- 4. Cultural Patronage:
 - Bahman Shah was a patron of art, literature, and architecture. He sponsored the construction of mosques, madrasas, and other architectural marvels that reflected the Indo-Islamic architectural style.

Legacy and Impact

1. Foundational Ruler:
 - Ala-ud-Din Bahman Shah's reign laid the foundation for the Bahmani Sultanate, which would go on to become one of the most powerful states in the Deccan region.
2. Regional Power:
 - His establishment of the Bahmani Sultanate marked a significant shift in the political landscape of southern India, establishing a powerful Muslim kingdom that would rival other regional powers.
3. Cultural and Architectural Heritage:
 - The architectural and cultural legacy of Bahman Shah's reign can still be seen in the numerous monuments and structures built during his time, which continue to be important historical landmarks in present-day Karnataka and Maharashtra.

Ala-ud-Din Bahman Shah's leadership and vision played a crucial role in the emergence of the Bahmani Sultanate as a major political and cultural force in medieval India. His contributions laid the groundwork for the subsequent expansion and prosperity of the kingdom under his successors.

Administration and Governance

Centralized Administration

1. Sultan's Authority:
 - The Bahmani Sultanate had a highly centralized administration with the Sultan as the supreme authority. The Sultan was supported by a council of ministers and nobles.
2. Provincial Governance:

- The kingdom was divided into provinces, each governed by a provincial governor or “Amir.” These governors were responsible for maintaining law and order, collecting taxes, and ensuring local administration.

Military Organization

1. Standing Army:

- The Bahmani Sultanate maintained a large standing army that included infantry, cavalry, and war elephants. The military was a crucial tool for both defense and territorial expansion.

2. Fortifications:

- Significant investments were made in fortifications and military infrastructure. Forts such as Gulbarga, Bidar, and Daulatabad were strategically important and heavily fortified.

Economy and Trade

Agricultural Economy

1. Agriculture:

- Agriculture was the backbone of the Bahmani economy. The kingdom’s fertile lands supported the cultivation of various crops, including grains, cotton, and spices.

2. Irrigation Systems:

- The Bahmani rulers implemented advanced irrigation systems to support agriculture. They constructed canals, tanks, and wells, enhancing agricultural productivity.

Trade and Commerce

1. Internal Trade:

- The Bahmani Sultanate fostered internal trade through the development of an extensive network of roads and market towns, facilitating the movement of goods and services within the kingdom.

2. External Trade:

- The kingdom engaged in significant maritime trade with foreign countries, including Persia, the Arab world, Southeast Asia, and China. Key export items included textiles, spices, and precious stones.

Culture and Society

Religion and Philosophy

1. Islamic Influence:

- The Bahmani Sultanate was a Muslim state, and Islam played a significant role in its administration and cultural life. The rulers promoted Islamic learning and built numerous mosques and madrasas.

2. Religious Tolerance:

- Despite being an Islamic state, the Bahmani rulers were known for their relative religious tolerance. They employed Hindus in their administration and respected local religious traditions.

Art and Architecture

1. Architectural Achievements:

- The Bahmani Sultanate is renowned for its distinctive Indo-Islamic architectural style. Notable examples include the Jama Masjid in Gulbarga, the Gol Gumbaz in Bijapur, and the madrasa of Mahmud Gawan in Bidar.

2. Cultural Patronage:

- The Bahmani rulers were great patrons of arts and culture. They supported poets, scholars, and artists, contributing to a vibrant cultural life within the kingdom.

Key Rulers and Their Contributions

Muhammad Shah I (1358-1375)

Muhammad Shah I, also known as Muhammad Shah I, was one of the notable rulers of the Bahmani Sultanate, succeeding Ala-ud-Din Bahman Shah. His reign, which lasted from 1358 to 1375, was marked by military campaigns, territorial expansion, and cultural patronage. Here's an overview of his life, achievements, and contributions:

Early Life and Ascension to the Throne

1. Background:

- Muhammad Shah I was the son and successor of Ala-ud-Din Bahman Shah, the founder of the Bahmani Sultanate. He belonged to the Bahmani dynasty, which emerged as a prominent power in the Deccan region of southern India.

2. Education and Training:

- Like many rulers of his time, Muhammad Shah received education and military training suitable for a future ruler. He likely learned administration, governance, military tactics, and Islamic studies.

3. Succession:

- Muhammad Shah I ascended to the throne of the Bahmani Sultanate upon the death of his father, Ala-ud-Din Bahman Shah, in 1358. His succession was likely smooth, as there are no significant records of internal strife or succession disputes.

Achievements and Contributions

1. Expansionist Policies:

- Muhammad Shah I continued the expansionist policies of his predecessors, seeking to consolidate and expand the territorial boundaries of the Bahmani Sultanate.

2. Military Campaigns:

- During his reign, Muhammad Shah I led several military campaigns against neighboring Hindu kingdoms and rival Muslim states in the Deccan. These campaigns aimed to assert Bahmani authority and extend its influence.

3. Territorial Expansion:

- Muhammad Shah I achieved notable territorial gains through conquests and strategic alliances. He expanded the Bahmani Sultanate's control over key regions of the Deccan, including parts of present-day Karnataka, Maharashtra, and Andhra Pradesh.

4. Administrative Reforms:

- As a ruler, Muhammad Shah I likely implemented administrative reforms aimed at enhancing governance, taxation, and law enforcement within the Bahmani Sultanate. These reforms would have helped strengthen the centralized administration of the kingdom.

5. Cultural Patronage:

- Muhammad Shah I, like his predecessors, was a patron of art, literature, and architecture. He sponsored the construction of mosques, madrasas, and other cultural institutions, fostering the development of Islamic culture in the Deccan.

Legacy and Impact

1. Consolidation of Power:

- Muhammad Shah I's reign contributed to the consolidation of Bahmani power in the Deccan region. His military campaigns and territorial acquisitions expanded the Sultanate's influence and solidified its position as a major political entity.

2. Cultural Flourishing:

- The patronage of art, literature, and architecture under Muhammad Shah I contributed to the cultural flourishing of the Bahmani Sultanate. His support for Islamic scholars and cultural institutions enriched the intellectual and artistic landscape of the kingdom.

3. Continuation of Bahmani Legacy:

- Muhammad Shah I upheld the traditions and policies established by his father and predecessors, ensuring the continuity of the Bahmani Sultanate's legacy. His reign maintained the Sultanate's prominence in the Deccan region during a period of significant political and social change.

Muhammad Shah I's rule as a Bahmani Sultan played a pivotal role in shaping the trajectory of the Bahmani Sultanate during the late 14th century. His military campaigns, administrative reforms, and cultural patronage contributed to the Sultanate's expansion, consolidation, and cultural flourishing, leaving a lasting impact on the history of the Deccan region.

1. Expansion and Consolidation:

- Muhammad Shah I expanded the kingdom's territories and consolidated its power. He established control over key regions and strengthened the administrative framework.

2. Cultural Contributions:

- His reign saw significant cultural and architectural developments, including the construction of the Jama Masjid in Gulbarga.

Firoz Shah Bahmani (1397-1422)

1. Military Campaigns:

- Firoz Shah Bahmani is known for his military campaigns against neighboring states, including the Vijayanagara Empire and the Gujarat Sultanate. He secured significant victories and expanded the kingdom's territories.

2. Cultural Patronage:

- He was a great patron of arts and culture, fostering the development of literature, music, and architecture. His reign is often considered a golden age for the Bahmani Sultanate.

Ahmad Shah I Wali (1422-1436)

1. Administrative Reforms:

- Ahmad Shah I Wali implemented several administrative reforms to improve governance and ensure efficient tax collection.

2. Religious and Cultural Achievements:

- He promoted religious and cultural activities, including the construction of mosques and madrasas. His reign also saw the strengthening of Sufi influence in the kingdom.

Decline and Legacy

Internal Strife and Fragmentation

1. Succession Conflicts:

- The later years of the Bahmani Sultanate were marked by internal strife and succession conflicts. These weakened the central authority and led to the fragmentation of the kingdom.

2. Rise of Deccan Sultanates:

- The Bahmani Sultanate eventually fragmented into five smaller Deccan Sultanates: Bijapur, Golconda, Ahmednagar, Bidar, and Berar. These successor states continued to play a significant role in the history of the Deccan.

Historical Significance

1. Cultural Contributions:

- The Bahmani Sultanate made significant contributions to Indo-Islamic culture, architecture, and literature. Its legacy can be seen in the enduring cultural and architectural landmarks in the Deccan region.

2. Role in Deccan Politics:

- The Bahmani Kingdom played a crucial role in shaping the political landscape of the Deccan. Its interactions and conflicts with neighboring states, such as the Vijayanagara Empire, influenced the region's history for centuries.

Conclusion

The Bahmani Kingdom, with its origins in a rebellion against the Delhi Sultanate, emerged as a powerful and influential state in the Deccan region. Its rulers, from Ala-ud-Din Bahman Shah to Ahmad Shah I Wali, established a strong and centralized administration, fostered economic prosperity, and promoted cultural and architectural achievements. Despite its eventual decline and fragmentation, the Bahmani Sultanate's legacy continues to be felt in the cultural and historical fabric of South India. The kingdom's contributions to art, architecture, and governance left an indelible mark on the history of the Deccan, making it a significant chapter in medieval Indian history.

- The Rani Rupmati Pavilion which was designed for military purposes.

The Malwa Sultanate, also known as the Malwa Sultanate of Mandu, was a medieval Indian kingdom that emerged in the Malwa region of present-day Madhya Pradesh. It was established by Dilawar Khan Ghuri, a former governor of the Delhi Sultanate, in the early 15th century. The Malwa Sultanate played a significant role in the history of central India, contributing to political, cultural, and architectural developments. Here's an overview of the Malwa dynasty:

Establishment and Early Rulers

1. Dilawar Khan Ghuri:

- Dilawar Khan Ghuri, a noble of Afghan origin, established the Malwa Sultanate after declaring independence from the Delhi Sultanate around 1392.
- He established his capital at Mandu, a strategically located fortress city in the Malwa region.

2. Hoshang Shah:

- Hoshang Shah, the son and successor of Dilawar Khan, is considered one of the notable rulers of the Malwa Sultanate.
- He expanded the territorial boundaries of the kingdom and initiated several architectural projects, including the construction of the Jahaz Mahal and the Ashrafi Mahal in Mandu.

Cultural and Architectural Achievements

1. Mandu as a Cultural Center:

- Mandu, under the rule of the Malwa Sultanate, emerged as a vibrant cultural center renowned for its architecture, poetry, and music.
- The kingdom attracted scholars, poets, and artists, contributing to the cultural richness of the region.

2. Architectural Marvels:

- The Malwa Sultanate is known for its architectural marvels, including palaces, mosques, mausoleums, and fortifications.
- Notable structures include the Jahaz Mahal (Ship Palace), Hindola Mahal (Swinging Palace), Jami Masjid (Great Mosque), and Roopmati's Pavilion.

Military and Political Developments

1. Conflict with Neighboring Kingdoms:

- The Malwa Sultanate faced conflicts with neighboring kingdoms, including the Gujarat Sultanate and the Rajput states of Rajasthan.
- Military campaigns and territorial disputes were common during this period as various powers vied for control over central India.

2. Succession Struggles:

- Succession struggles and internal conflicts were also prevalent within the Malwa Sultanate, leading to periods of instability and political turmoil.

Decline and Integration

1. Decline in the 16th Century:

- The Malwa Sultanate faced internal and external pressures, including invasions by the Mughal Empire under Emperor Akbar.
- By the late 16th century, the Malwa Sultanate had declined significantly, and its territories were gradually absorbed into the expanding Mughal Empire.

2. Integration into the Mughal Empire:

- The final ruler of the Malwa Sultanate, Baz Bahadur, was defeated by the Mughal forces under Akbar in 1561.
- With the annexation of Malwa, the region became a part of the Mughal Empire's administrative structure, marking the end of the independent Malwa Sultanate.

Legacy

1. Architectural Heritage:

- The Malwa Sultanate's architectural legacy, particularly in Mandu, continues to attract tourists and scholars interested in medieval Indian history and architecture.
- The region's monuments reflect a blend of Islamic, Hindu, and indigenous architectural styles, showcasing the cultural diversity of central India.

2. Cultural Contributions:

- The Malwa Sultanate's patronage of literature, poetry, and music contributed to the cultural vibrancy of the region, leaving a lasting impact on the cultural heritage of central India.

3. Historical Significance:

- The Malwa Sultanate played a significant role in shaping the history and culture of central India during the medieval period. It served as a center of political power, cultural exchange, and architectural innovation, leaving behind a rich and diverse legacy.

Unit 4-

Society and Economy in Sultanate and Mughal period I. Economic condition in Sultanate period - Agriculture, Industries and trade. II. Social Life of Sultanate period and status of women. III. Mughal Administration: Land revenue system, Mansabdari and Jagirdari system. IV. Social life in Mughal Period and Status of women. V. Economic Condition in Mughal Period: Agriculture, Trade, Industry and commerce. VI. Development of literature in Medieval period..

INTRODUCTION

The scope of the present Unit confines itself to the process of the establishment of Mughal rule in India under Babur and Humayun. Afghans' bid to challenge and overthrow Mughal authority is also discussed. A brief survey of the Afghan rule has also been attempted. The Unit deals mainly with the territorial expansion under Babur and Humayun. The organisational aspects of the Mughals will be dealt in subsequent Blocks.

POLITICAL SCENARIO ON THE EVE OF BABUR'S INVASION

The first half of the fifteenth century witnessed political instability with the disintegration of the Tughluq dynasty. Both the Saiyyad (1414-1451) and the Lodi (1451-1526) rulers failed to cope with 'the disruptive forces (see Unit 2). The nobles resented and rebelled at the earliest opportunity. The political chaos in the North-West provinces had weakened the centre. Now let us examine what was happening in other parts of India. In Central India there were three kingdoms: Oujarat, Malwa and Mewar. The power of Sultan Mahmud Khalji II of Malwa was, however, on the decline. Oujarat was ruled by Muzaffar Shah II, while Mewar under the leadership of Sisodia ruler Rana Sanga was the most powerful kingdom. Rulers of Malwa were under constant pressure of the Lodis, Mewar and Gujarat. This was because it was not only the most fertile region and an important source for elephant supply but it also provided an important trade route to Gujarat sea-ports. Hence, it was an important region for the Lodis. Besides, for both Gujarat and Mewar it could serve as a buffer against the Lodis. The Sultan of Malwa was an incompetent ruler, and his prime minister Medini Rai could hardly hold the kingdom intact for long in the wake of internal strifes. Finally, Rana Sanga, succeeded in extending his influence over Malwa and Gujarat. By the close of the 15th century, Rana Sanga's sway over Rajputana became almost complete with the occupation of Ranthambhor and Chanderi. To the south, there were powerful Vijaynagar and Bahmani kingdoms (see Course EHI-03, Block 7). Towards the east, Nusrat Shah ruled Bengal. Towards the closing years of Ibrahim Lodi's reign, Afghan chieftains Nasir Khan Lohani, Ma'ruf Farmuli, etc. succeeded in carving out separate kingdom of Jaunpur under Sultan Muhammad Shah. Besides these major powers, there were numerous Afghan chieftaincies around Agra - the most powerful ones being those of Hasan Khan in Mewar, Nizam Khan in Bayana, Muhammad Zaitun in Dholpur, Tatar Khan Sarang Khani in Gwalior, Husain Khan Lohani in Rapri. Qutub Khan in Etawa, Alam Khan in Kalpi, and Qasim Sambhali in Sambhal, etc. While analysing the political set-up on the eve of Babur's invasion it is generally said (Rushbrooke William) that there was confederacy of Rajput principalities which was ready to seize the control of Hindustan. It is held that had Babur not intervened, the Rajputs led by their illustrious leader Rana Sanga would have captured power in northern India. It is argued that the political division of the regional states was religious in nature and that Rajput confederacy under Rana Sanga fired by religious zeal wanted to establish a Hindu Empire. This assumption is based on the famous passage of Baburnama where Babur says that Hindustan was governed by 'five Musalman rulers': the Lodis (at the centre), Gujarat, Malwa, Bahmani, and Bengal, and two 'pagans' (Rana Sanga of Mewar and Vijaynagar). Besides, the fathnama issued after the battle of Khanwa suggests that Rajput confederacy under Rana was inspired by religious zeal and organised with the intention to overthrow the "Islamic power". However, such observations have been questioned by historians. Babur has nowhere suggested that these powers were antagonistic against each other on religious grounds. Instead, Babur himself admits that many rajas and ranas were obedient to Islam. Moreover, if we see the composition of the confederacy, there were many Muslim chieftains like Hasan Khan Mewati, Mahmud Khan Lodi, etc. who side with Rana Sanga against Babur. Rather Waqiat-i Mushtaqi (1560) blames Hasan Khan Mewati for creating the confederacy to overthrow the Mughal power in India. In fact, it was not Rana Sanga, but Sultan Mahmud who proclaimed himself the king of Delhi. Though, the power of Rana was unquestionable, Babur was more anxious of Afghan menace: the theory of religious consideration does not seem to hold ground.

CENTRAL ASIA AND BABUR

We have already discussed political formations in Central Asia and Persia during the 16th century in Unit 1. By the close of the 15th century, the power of the Timurids was on the decline. By this time the Uzbeks succeeded in establishing strong footholds in Transoxiana under Shaibani Khan. Around the same time, the Safavis rose into prominence under Shah Ismail in Iran; while further west the Ottoman Turks dominated the scene. We have already discussed how Shaibani Khan overran almost whole of Transoxiana and Khorasan. However, finally in 1510 Shah Ismail of Iran defeated Shaibani Khan. In a short while (1512) the Ottoman Sultan defeated Shah Ismail, thus leaving the stage again to the Uzbeks to become the master of the whole Transoxiana. Babur ascended the throne at Farghana (a small principality in Transoxiana) in 1494 at the tender age of twelve. However, it was not a smooth succession for Babur. Both the Mongol Khans as well as the Timurid princes, specially Sultan Ahmad Mina of Samarqand, an uncle of Babur, had interests in Farghana. Besides, Babur had to face the discontented nobility. Against all odds Babur struggled to strengthen his foothold in Central Asia and did succeed in taking Samarqand twice (1497, 1500). But he could hardly hold that for long. With Shaibani Khan's success over Khorasan (1507) the last of the four Timurid centres of power finally sealed Babur's fate in Central Asia and he was left with no option but to look towards Kabul where the conditions were most favourable. Its ruler Ulugh Beg Mina had already died (1501). Babur occupied Kabul in 1504. Yet Babur could not completely leave the dream to rule over Central Asia. With the help of Shah Ismail Safavi, he was able to control over Samarqand (1511) but Shah Ismail's defeat in 1512 and the resurgence of the Uzbeks left Babur with no alternative but to consolidate himself at Kabul. Thus, it was the Central Asian situation which pressed and convinced (after 1512) Babur to abandon the hopes of creating an Empire in Central Asia and look towards India. The rich resources of India and the meagre income of Afghanistan, as Abul Fazl comments, might have been another attraction for Babur. The unstable political situation after Sikandar Lodi's death convinced him of political discontentment and disorder in the Lodi Empire. Invitations from Rana Sanga and Daulat Khan Lodi, the governor of Punjab, might have whetted Babur's ambitions. Perhaps Timur's legacy also provided some background for his invasion. (After the siege of Bhira in 1519, Babur asked Ibrahim Lodi to return western Punjab which belonged to his uncle Ulugh Beg Mizra.) Thus, Babur had both reasons and opportunity to look towards India. Much before the final showdown at the battle of Panipat (1526), Babur had invaded India four times. These skirmishes were trials of strength of Mughal arms and Lodi forces. The first to fall was Bhira (1519-1520), the gateway of Hindustan, followed by Sialkot (1520) and Lahore (1524). Finally, Ibrahim Lodi and Babur's forces met at the historic battlefield of Panipat. The battle lasted for just few hours in favour of Babur. The battle shows Babur's skill in the art of warfare. His soldiers were less in number but the organisation was superior. Ibrahim's forces though many times greater in number (approximately 1,00,000 soldiers and 1000-500 elephants as compared to Babur's 12,000 horsemen) fared badly. Babur successfully applied the Rumi (Ottoman) method of warfare (for details see chart given on next page). As the Afghans advanced to attack the right flank; Babur ordered his reserve forces under Abdul Aziz to move. These Afghans, greater in number, were unable to move forward nor backward. They were attacked from both sides. This created total confusion among the Afghan forces, Babur took full advantage of the situation and his right and left wings soon attacked the Afghan forces from the rear side. This was followed with the opening up of fireshots. This completely paralysed the Afghan army.

Sultan Ibrahim Lodi. In the battle it was not Babur's artillery but his 'superb tactics' and the 'mounted archers' played the decisive role, a fact which Babur himself acknowledged. The battle of Panipat, though, formally established the Mughal rule in India, it was first among the series of battles in the years to come. For example, to secure this triumph, it was equally important to overcome Rana Sanga of Mewar and the chieftains in and around Delhi and Agra. Another important opponent in the eastern India was the Afghans. To add to this, problems were mounting within his own nobility.

Babur and the Rajput Kingdoms We have already discussed that Rana Sanga of Mewar was a power to reckon with. Babur, in his Memoirs, has blamed Rana Sanga for breaking his promise by not siding with him in the battle of Panipat against Ibrahim Lodi. Leaving apart the controversy whether it was Rana or Babur who asked for help, the fact remains that there was some understanding on both sides to join hands against Ibrahim Lodi in which the Rana faltered. Rana expected Babur to return to Kabul and leave him free to establish his hegemony, if not over whole of Hindustan, at least over Rajputana. Babur's decision to stay back must have given a big jolt to Rana's ambitions. Babur was also fully aware of the fact that it would be impossible for him to consolidate his position in India unless he shattered the Rana's power. Rana Sanga this time succeeded in establishing the confederacy against Babur with the help of Afghan nobles. Hasan Khan Mewati not only joined the Rana but also played a crucial role in forming the confederacy. This time (1527) Hasan Khan of Bari and Husain Khan Gurg-andaz joined the Rana. Husain Khan Nuhani occupied Rapri, Rustam Khan prevailed over Koil, while Qutub Khan captured Chandawar, Pressure of eastern Afghans was so much that Sultan Muhammad Dildai had to leave Qannauj and join ' Babur. To add to this, the defeat of Babur's commander Abdul Aziz and Muhibb Ali at Biana and their praise of the valour of the Rajput army completely demoralised

Babur and the Afghan Chieftains The Afghans had surrendered Delhi, but they were still powerful in the east (Bihar and parts of Jaunpur) where the Nuhani Afghans were dominant led by Sultan Muhammad Nuhani. The Afghans of Chunar, Jaunpur and Awadh were not ready to cooperate with the Nuhanis in a bid to give a united opposition against the Mughals. Instead, they surrendered meekly to Humayun (1527). In the meantime Sultan Muhammad Nuhani died (1528) and left the Nuhanis disoriented as his son Jalal Khan was still a minor. But the vacuum was soon filled by the appearance of Prince Mahmud Lodi, son of Sikandar Lodi and brother of Ibrahim. The Afghans, including the non-Nuhanis, who were a little hesitant earlier to side with the Nuhanis, now readily accepted Mahmud's leadership. Besides, even the Nuhani Afghans like Babban, Bayazid and Fath Khan Sarwani, etc. who felt leaderless with the desertion of Jalal to Bengal, welcomed Mahmud, Nusrat Shah of Bengal also, though *apparently advocated friendship with Babur, secretly adopted hostile measures against him. He considered the existence of the Nuhani kingdom in Bihar as buffer between the Mughals and his own possessions in parts of Bihar. Babur could hardly afford to ignore these developments. He mobilized his forces at Ghagra and inflicted a crushing defeat upon Nusrat Shah's army (1529). Thus ended the Afghan-Nusrat coalition and Nusrat Shah had to surrender large number of Afghan rebels who had taken asylum in his territory. The Afghans were now totally demoralized. Though Babban and Bayazid did attempt to resist at Awadh, but when pressurized (1529) they fled to Mahmud. Thus, within four years Babur succeeded in crushing the hostile powers and now could think of consolidating himself at Delhi. But he could hardly get the opportunity to rule as he died soon after (29 December, 1530). The establishment of the Mughal Empire under the aegis of Babur was significant. Though the Afghans and Rajputs could not be crushed completely, a task left to his successors, his two major blows at Panipat and Khanwa were certainly decisive and destroyed the balance of power in the region and perhaps was a step towards the establishment of an all-India empire.

ii-Humayun

The situation under Humayun was quite different. Like Babur he did not command the respect and esteem of the nobility. Moreover, the Chaghatai nobles were not favourably inclined towards him and the Indian nobles, who had joined Babur's service, deserted the Mughals at Humayun's accession. Muhammad Sultan Mina, a descendant of Timur; Muhammad Zaman and Mir Muhammad Mahdi Khwaja, brother-in-law of Babur, were considered worthy to aspire to the throne; especially Amir Nizamuddin Ali Khalifa, a grandee of Babur, hatched a conspiracy which failed. To sustain imperial power and hegemony, Humayun had to contend against the Afghans both in the east and the west which was supported by a large social base. But, most dangerous of all, was Humayun's brother Kamran Mirza. The situation was further aggravated by the existence of two centres of power within the empire - Humayun at the centre and Kamran's autonomous control over Afghanistan and Punjab. Humayun decided to deal, at first, with the western Afghans. I 5.5.1 Bahadur Shah and Humayun Humayun's relations with Bahadur Shah represent a curious contrast due to the circumstances. In the beginning (Jan. 1531 to mid 1533), Bahadur Shah assured Humayun of friendship and loyalty. But, at the same time he also attempted to expand his area of influence closer to Mughal frontiers. The first to taste the wrath was Malwa. Bahadur Shah was a little apprehensive of the Mughal designs on Malwa. He feared that if this buffer state between the two was left unoccupied, the Mughals might attempt to conquer it. Besides, all trade routes to Gujarat ports passed through Malwa. It was also very fertile and rich in grain production and Gujarat depended much upon this region for grain supply. After 1530, Bahadur Shah started putting up military pressure on Malwa and finally occupied it in Jan. 1531. Soon after, Bahadur . Shah started making alliances with Humayun's adversaries in the east - Sher Shah in Bihar (1531-32) and Nusrat Shah in Bengal (Aug.-Sept. 1532). Nusrat Shah is also reported to have sent an embassy under Khwajasara Malik (Aug.-Sept. 1532) who was well received by Bahadur Shah. Besides, many disgruntled Afghans of the north and the east also joined him in a bid to oust Mughals in order to regain their lost pride. Sultan Alauddin Lodi, son of Bahlul Lodi, and his sons Fath Khan and Tatar Khan, Rai Nar Singh, nephew of Raja Bikramajit of Gwalior (1528) and Alam Khan Lodi of Kalpi (1531), all looked towards Bahadur Shah and extended their help against the Mughals. Even the eastern Afghans, Babban Khan Lodi (Shahu Khail), Malik Roop Chand, Dattu Sarwani and Ma'ruf Farmuli joined hands with Bahadur Shah. Humayun could ill afford to ignore these developments. Situation could have worsened in case of combined Afghan attack from east and the west. In the meantime, Bahadur Shah's aggressive designs continued unabated. He occupied Bhilsa, Raisen, Ujjain and Gagraon. Thus he could well keep the Mughals away from ' Gwalior, Kalinjar, Bayana and Agra. While Bahadur Shah was busy in expanding towards Malwa and Rajputana Humayun was besieging Chunar. These developments forced him to rush back to Agra (1532-33). But Bahadur Shah was keen to avoid any clash with the Mughals and immediately sent an embassy under Khurasan Khan (1533-34). Humayun demanded that he should not give shelter to Mughal rebels especially Muhammad Zaman Mirza. At the same time Humayun agreed not to threaten the Gujarati establishments while Bahadur Shah promised to withdraw from Mandu. Bahadur Shah in the meantime was involved in suppressing the Portuguese menace (Sept.-Dec. 1533) and Humayun was busy in tackling the Afghans in the east. New developments resulted in the invasion of Gujarat by Humayun in 1535. In Jan. 1534 Bahadur Shah gave shelter to Muhammad Zaman Mirza and also attacked Chittor..Chittor was important for Bahadur Shah for it could provide him a strong base. It could have also facilitated expansion towards Ajmer, Nagor and Ranthambhor. But Humayun at this point made no attempt to stop Bahadur Shah from conquering Chittor. His move from Agra to Kalpi was too slow. Similarly, he took a longer route to reach Chittor. It seems that Humayun was not very keen to stop Bahadur Shah from occupying Chittor. Bahadur Shah was anxious to reach Mandu before Humayun could intercept. But the latter reached there much before. Mandu was the only route to retreat from Chittor to Gujarat and that was already occupied by Humayun. He blocked Bahadur Shah's camp from all directions thus cutting the supplies. Within a month, with no hope left, Gujarati army themselves destroyed their best artillery to stop the Mughals to use it against them. Bahadur Shah fled from Mandu to Champaner, Ahmedabad, Cambay and crossed Kathiawar and reached Diu. Mughals chased him. But, again, they hardly showed any eagerness for either arresting or killing Bahadur Shah. It seems that the real aim of Humayun was just to destroy the power of Gujarat. At Champaner, when Bahadur Shah was recognised by Mughal officers, they did not arrest him. Soon Humayun had to leave Mandu and rush to Agra because his long absence from there he resulted in rebellions in Doab and Agra. Mandu was now left under the charge of Mirza Askari. The handling of local population by the Mughals had caused widespread indignation. People were looted and slaughtered. As a result, as soon as Humayun left Mandu people rejoiced Bahadur Shah's return from Diu. Bahadur Shah took advantage of the opportunity and defeated the Mughals at Ahmedabad. In the meantime, to check the Portuguese advance, Bahadur Shah had to return to Diu. But this time the Portuguese succeeded and Bahadur Shah was treacherously murdered (17 Feb. 1537). This created confusion everywhere. The Afghans, left with no alternative, now turned towards Sher Shah for leadership. Eastern Afghans and Humayun The Afghans' defeat at the hands of Humayun (siege of Chunar November, 1531) resulted in the flight of Afghan nobles to Gujarat. This created a political vacuum in the east, providing an opportunity to Sher Khan to consolidate his power. The period between 1530-35 proved crucial for Sher Shah. To consolidate his position in the east, he had to tackle with Bengal and Afghan nobles who got shelter under the Bengal ruler. On the otherhand, he was hardly in a position to face the Mughals in case of any direct clash. Fortunately circumstances took a favourable turn for Sher Shah. Considering Bahadur Shah of Gujarat a serious threat, Humayun decided to tackle him first. During this period Sher Shah was left free to consolidate himself. Sher Shah had to face two invasions of Bengal rulers. The first attack took place under Qutub Khan, the muqti of Munger in 1532-33 during Sultan Nusrat Shah's reign, and, the second under Ibrahim Khan during Sultan Mahmud Shah's reign (1534). However, Bengal's armies were defeated on both the occasions. These successes completely exposed the weakness of the Bengal army. This raised the prestige of Sher Khan. The eastern Afghans who had earlier deserted him now rushed to setve under his banner. Besides, the destruction and death of Bahadur Shah by Humayun left the Afghans with no alternative but to join him against the Mughals. Now Sher Shah wanted to establish himself as the undisputed Afghan leader. This time (1535) he took the offensive and defeated the Bengal army in the battle of Surajgarh. In a peace settlement after the battle, Sultan Mahmud Shah of Bengal agreed to supply war elephants and financial help to Sher Shah whenever required. This grand success against Bengal, followed by his attacks on the Mughal territories in the east (from GoraKhpur to Banaras). alarmed Humayun. Humayun now deputed Hindu Beg as governor (hakim) of Jaunpur to keep an eye on the developments in the eastern region. But, Sher Shah, acting cautiously on the one hand-assured Hindu Beg of his loyalty, while on the other utilized the time for strengthening his army for his next onslaught on Mughals. As soon his preparations were over, he wrote a threatening letter to Hindu Beg. At the same time he launched his second attack on Bengal(1537). Hindu Beg, annoyed with Sher Shah's behaviour, reported his hostile intentions to Humayun. The Afghan nobles suggested Humayun to stop Sher Shah from occupying Bengal, while the Mughal nobles advised him to occupy Chunar first to use it as a base for his operations in the east. The latter option was important for maintaining the line of communications with Agra. But it took too long for Rumi Khan to capture Chunar (6months). Historians consider it a great 'mistake' that cost Humayun his 'empire'. Though leaving Chunar in the hands of the Afghans could have been unwise, leaving Sher Shah free and unchecked in Bengal was 'equally wrong'. Sher Shah utilized the time and captured Gaur (April, 1538), the capital of Bengal. At this stage, Humayun asked Sher Shah to transfer Bengal and Rohtasgarh to him, but Sher Shah was not ready to surrender Bengal and the negotiations failed. Now Humayun decided to curb Sher Shah's power but he did not want to involve himself in Bengal politics. Yet, the circumstances were forcing him towards it. Sher Shah shrewdly withdrew from Bengal, and Humayun, with no obvious obstructions, reached Bengal (September, 1538). He had to stay there for four months until he finally settled the prevailing chaos. In the meantime Sher Shah succeeded in controlling the routes to Agra thus making communication difficult for Humayun. To add to Humayun's worries, Hindal Mirza, who was sent to gather supplies for his army, assumed sovereign power. Humayun hurried back to Chunar and reached Chausa (March 1539). He encamped on the western side of the river Karmanasa. At this stage Humayun was still in control of the situation. On the front side he was guarded by the river, while to his rear was Chunar, which was still in the hands of his men. Sher Shah, too, showed willingness to accept truce. But at this stage Humayun unnecessarily exposed himself to danger by crossing the river. Sher Shah knowing fully well the paucity of Humayun's provisions, equipment and transport wasted no time in exploiting the situation. He, while pretending to fulfil the terms of the truce, attacked the Mughal army. Panic spread in the Mughal camp. Large number of Mughal forces were killed. Humayun and Askari Mirza managed to flee. Humayun reached Agra by way of Kara Manikpur and Kalpi (July 1539). Raja Virbhan, the ruler of Gahora, helped greatly in rescuing them. Kamran Mirza welcomed Humayun on his return to Agra with his army totally destroyed; while Sher Shah, elated by his victory, proclaimed himself an independent king. Under these circumstances, the final clash was inevitable. Humayun was defeated badly in the battle of Qannauj the banks of Ganga (1540). This paved the way for the establishment of the second Afghan empire in India. A number of factors had contributed in Humayun's debacle against Sher Shah.

These include:

- i) He faced hostility of his brothers. On many occasions he dealt with them too kindly.
- ii) Sometime he reacted lethargically when the situation demanded swift action. This can be seen well in his Gujarat and Bengal campaigns.
- iii) He was also victim of an 'inexorable fate'. For example Mahmud Shah of Bengal kept him unnecessarily involved in Bengal politics. This provided an opportunity to Sher Shah to gain strength.
- iv) Humayun also lacked financial resources for continuous warfare: This weakness became very much evident when in Bengal he got stranded and lacked money and supplies (1539).
- v) Besides, Sher Shah had the courage, experience and organising abilities; he was also skilled in exploiting political opportunities. Humayun could not match his capabilities.

Humayun and His Brothers

Immediately after the death of his father Babur, Humayun divided his empire into four parts giving Mewat to Hindal, Sambhal to Askari and Punjab, Kabul and Qandahar to Kamran. The very division itself was unfavourable to Humayun for he was left with little resources at his disposal. In spite of this kind treatment, his brothers hardly helped him when he needed. His brother Askari Mina, whom Humayun made governor of Gujarat at the time of Bahadur Shah's attack on Ahmedabad, could not tackle the situation. As a result Humayun had to lose Malwa (1537). Askari Mina also sided with Kamran and proceeded to Qandahar at the crucial juncture when Humayun needed their help after his defeat at the hands of Sher Shah at Qannauj. However, Hindal Mina by and large remained loyal to Humayun and even died fighting for him (1551). The greatest threat to Humayun arose from Kamran Mina who had assumed almost a semi-independent position in Afghanistan and Punjab. Thus emerged two centres of power - one at Lahore and the other at Agra. This situation prevented the rise of a centralised state and the political instability was evident in the first major crisis which the Mughals faced (1538-1540). Though Kamran Mirza remained loyal to Humayun in early years and once rushed to Delhi at the call of Yaddar Nasir Mina (governor of Delhi) to tackle Hindal Mina (June 1539). Here again, instead of marching towards Chausa to help Humayun, both the brothers, Hindal and Kamran, watched the developments from a distance. Had they extended help to Humayun, he could have defeated Sher Shah. It seems Kamran was more interested in defending his own territory rather than putting up a united front against the Afghans. Even before Humayun's final clash with Sher Shah (ISM), Kamran Mirza, instead of sending his whole army, sent only 3000 troops to serve the Emperor at Lahore. After Humayun's defeat at the hands of Sher Shah (1540), Kamran even sent a proposal to Sher Shah, through Qazi Abdullah, to accept Punjab as the frontier between the two. Sher Shah realised that as there was no unanimity between the brothers and forced them to accept Indus as the boundary. Kamran felt that he had to lose Punjab due to the incompetency of his brother and became more anxious to save Kabul and Qandahar for himself. The period between 1545-1553 is one during which Humayun was busy in dealing with Kamran Mirza (see above). However, it is difficult to put the entire blame for Humayun's failures on his brothers. But their support would have made things easier for Humayun and the Empire could have been saved.

ESTABLISHMENT OF SECOND AFGHAN EMPIRE IN INDIA:

1540-1555 After defeating the Mughal Emperor, Sher Shah declared himself as the sovereign ruler and started building the Second Afghan Empire. The fifteen years (1540-1555) of Afghan rule form an interlude in the history of Mughal Empire. This period, nevertheless, was significant for the administrative innovations and reorganisation. The process of consolidation under Sher Shah would be discussed in Blocks 4 and 5. During his short reign (1540-1545), he was busy in fighting for keeping his new Empire intact. Here we will give a very brief account of Sher Shah's conflicts during this period. The Ghakkars, (inhabitants on the North-West frontier between the Indus and Jhelum rivers) were the first one to come in conflict with him. But Sher Shah got very little success in this venture. The Ghakkars put up a stiff resistance. Khizr Khan, the governor of Bengal, also showed some signs of independence. All this forced him to withdraw from Punjab and marched towards Bengal (1541). There he dismissed Khizr Khan. Malwa was the next target of Sher Shah where Qadir Shah showed disobedience. On this way he occupied Gwalior from Abdul Qasim. Qadir Shah also surrendered and was arrested (1542). To tackle the Rajputs, Sher Shah besieged Raisen in 1543. Raja Puran Mal, ruler of Raisen, though offered submission, Sher Shah attacked him. Puran Mal along with many others died in the battle. The province of Multan was also conquered in 1543. In spite of the defeat of the Rajputs at Raisen, Maldeo of Marwar was still formidable. He had already extended his dominion towards Sambhar, Nagor, Bikaner, Ajmer and Bednar. Sher Shah marched towards him and in 1544 occupied Ajmer, Pali and Mount Abu. Without any serious resistance, Udai Singh also handed over the keys of Chittor to Sher Shah. Thus, almost the whole of Rajputana fell into his hands. Sher Shah also succeeded in occupying the impregnable fort of Kalinjar, but, while besieging it, Sher Shah was severely wounded on account of explosion and died soon after (22 May 1545). Thus ended the glorious career of Sher Shah. Sher Shah's son and successor Islam Shah (1545-1553), though he kept the legacy of his father intact, failed to consolidate it any further. He was most of the time busy in suppressing the intrigues within his own camp which emerged under the leadership of his brother Adil Shah along with Azam Humayun and Khawwas Khan. Besides, his humiliating treatment towards the Niyazi Afghans specifically and the Afghans in general generated more resentment rather than gaining any support. The ill effects of which had to be borne by his son and successor. One finds that in spite of all efforts of Islam Shah to clear the road for the smooth succession of his son after his death (1553) internal strifes marred the infant Afghan kingdom to the advantage of Humayun. Soon after Islam Shah's death, Mubbariz Khan murdered Islam's son Feroz and ascended the throne with the title of Adil Shah. Sedition and rebellions marred the entire country and the Empire broke into 'five' kingdoms (Ahmad Khan Sur in Punjab; Ibrahim Shah in Sambhal and Doab; Adil Shah in Chunar and Bihar; Malwa under Baz Bahadur; and Sikandar Shah controlled Delhi and Agra). This provided an ideal climate for Humayun to strike.

REVIVAL OF MUGHAL RULE IN INDIA

After Humayun's defeat at Qannauj, when Askari Mirza and Kamran withdrew to the North-West; Hindal and Yadgar Nasir Mina decided to be with Humayun. The latter now decided to try his luck in Sind. But, here, Hindal Mina also deserted him and at the invitation of Kamran marched towards Qandahar. The ruler of Sind, Shah Husain Arghun, also succeeded in winning over Yadgar Nasir Mina by giving his daughter in marriage. Humayun himself could not succeed in his bid to occupy Sihwan. Frustrated by all these developments, Humayun alone tried his luck in Rajputana. He was invited by Raja Maldeo, the ruler of Marwar (July 1542). But, at this juncture, Sher Shah asked Maldeo to hand over Humayun. The latter fled in fear (August 1542). He was well received by Rana Birsal. With the help of the Rana Humayun tried his luck in Sind once more but failed. Now he marched towards Persia via Ghazni (December 1543) where he was well-received by Shah Tahmasp (1544). The latter promised him in regaining Qandahar, 'Kabul and Ghazni provided he ' promised to surrender Qandahar to the Shah. It was agreed upon and Qandahar, then under Askari Mirza, was occupied and handed over to the Shah. But misunderstandings crept up, for the Persians showed no eagerness to help Humayun to occupy Kabul and Ghazni. This compelled Humayun to wrest Qandahar from the Persians (1545). Humayun's success at Qandahar won over many nobles - specially Hindal and Yadgar Nasir Mirza to change sides. These developments totally demoralized Kamran and he fled from Kabul to Ghazna and thence to Sind and thus facilitated Humayun's entry in Kabul (November 1545). From 1545 to 1553, Humayun spent his energies mainly in dealing with his brother Kamran who kept Humayun on his toes. In this conflict Hindal Mirza lost his life on the battlefield (1551). This forced Humayun to have a final showdown. Kamran, tried to get help from Islam Shah but was cold shouldered. While fleeing from place to place, the Ghakkar chieftain Sultan Adam captured Kamran and handed him over to Humayun. Finally, Kamran was blinded and permitted to proceed to Mecca (where he died in 1557). With the end of Kamran's opposition, Humayun emerged an undisputed master of Kabul. With favourable political climate in India (see supra), now Humayun could systematically plan for the re-acquisition of his lost Indian Empire. He started in November 1554 and reached Lahore in Feb. 1555. With little difficulty, the Mughals continued their victorious march and occupied Machhiwara. The final clash took place at Sirhind. Sikandar Shah Sur had to flee towards the Siwalik and the road to Delhi was thus lay clear. Humayun reached Salimgarh in June 1555 and occupied Delhi. However, Humayun could hardly accomplish the task of conquest and consolidation. He died soon after (26 January 1556) leaving behind his minor son Akbar under heavy odds.

Sher Shah Suri

The Sur Empire, governed by the Afghan Sur dynasty, dominated northern India for approximately 16 to 18 years, spanning from 1538/1540 to 1556. Sasaram, located in present-day Bihar, served as its capital, with Sher Shah Suri as its founder.

Under the Sur dynasty, the empire extended its influence over almost all the territories of the Mughal Empire along the Indo-Gangetic Plain. This territorial control stretched from eastern Balochistan in the west of the Indus River to the contemporary Rakhine region in Myanmar.

The Sur Dynasty is significant for both the UPSC Prelims and GS Paper 1 Syllabus of the UPSC Mains curriculum.

About Sur Dynasty

History

- Sher Shah Suri, a Pashtun from Afghanistan, established the Sur dynasty, which ruled over northern India from 1540 to 1556. Sher Shah Suri succeeded the Mughal Dynasty during Humayun's reign.
- India was ruled by the Sur dynasty from 1540 until 1555. Sher Shah Suri, formerly known as Farid, the son of an Afghan landowner named Hasan Khan Suri, developed it. The entire number of rulers remained at seven, with just one, Sher Khan or Sher Shah Suri, ruling effectively.

Rise to Power

Sher Shah Suri defeated Humayun twice at the Battle of Chausa and Bilgram. Humayun, Babur's son, gave up hope and fled to Persia. Sher Shah ruled over Delhi for only five years, yet his reign was a watershed moment in the Subcontinent.

- Sher Khan had grown to prominence, but he still had a long way to go before becoming Afghanistan's national leader.
- After a year, with the entrance of Ibrahim Lodi's younger brother, Mahmood Lodi, in Bihar, his stars began to wane.
- He was a genuine contender for the throne of Delhi. Despite being defeated twice, he never gave up hope.
- He sought to unify all Afghans under his flag once he arrived in Bihar in order to reestablish Afghan sovereignty in India.
- Sher Khan was forced to fight beside him at the Battle of Ghagra in 1529. Sher Khan surrendered to Babur shortly after the Afghans were defeated.
- He was returned to his previous position, but he was compelled to pay Mughal Emperor yearly tribute.
- Sher Khan returned to administration and restored law and order in his territory.
- After the death of Dadu Bibi, the newborn monarch's mother and regent, Sher Khan became the regent and de facto ruler of south Bihar.

Sher Shah Suri

- Sher Shah Suri founded the Sur dynasty in India. In 1486, he was born in Sasaram, Bihar, the son of a Jagirdar. His given name was Farid. At the age of 15, he left his home and moved to Jaunpur.
- There he learned Arabic and Persian. He showed exceptional administrative abilities, and as a result, his father entrusted him with the administration of his jagir.
 - But, for unknown reasons, he departed and entered the service of Mughal Emperor Babar.
- Although Sher Shah reigned for only five years, his reforms were so successful that the Mughals and British alike emulated his techniques.
- Sher Shah departed his home at a young age due to his stepmother's harshness. He was a fantastic administrator.
- When Babur defeated Ibrahim Lodhi and became King of India, Sher Shah joined him and impressed him with his cunning. Babur named him governor of Bihar.
 - After Babur's death, the Mughal administration became unstable, and Sher Shah took advantage of the situation and declared independence.

Sher Shah's Administration

- Sher Shah maintained central administration of the Delhi Sultanate. The Empire was split into Sarkars by him.
- Each Sarkar had three significant officers:
 - Chief Shiqdar or Shiqdar-i-Shiqdaran (in charge of Police administration or Law and Order),
 - Chief Munsif or Munsif-i-Munsifan (in charge of Revenue administration),
 - Poddar (Treasurer).
- Sarkars were subdivided further into
 - Parganas. Shiqdar (sub-district Police officer),
 - Munsif (sub-district Revenue officer),
 - and Khazanadar (sub-district Revenue officer) was also there.
- The village is the final administrative unit. The village administration was overseen by Patwari.
- He integrated the Patta System into the income stream. He was India's first monarch to extend property rights to peasants. He was awarded the title Nyaya Simha after serving the people with fair justice.
- He built a highway network and upgraded transportation and communication infrastructure. Along roads, saris (guest homes) were built.
- Some Sarais have been transformed into DakChowkis (Post Offices). He introduced new coins called Gold Mohar and Silver Rupaiya. The British and Mughals carried out the Rupaiya.

Achievements of Sher Shah Suri

Sher Shah Suri instituted the Dagh method, sometimes known as "branding the horses", to discourage fraudulent musters. Shersah resurrected the Dak-chaukl, an espionage system that let him gather intelligence from all around his domain.

He created four important roadways to connect his kingdom's four corners. He did away with both old and mixed currencies. He established the ratio of copper to silver coinage. He also created gold and silver coins, which were utilized to enhance the nation's overall economic situation.

Sher Shah Suri, born Farid Khan, was a remarkable ruler who rose from humble beginnings to become one of the most influential figures in medieval Indian history. His reign, though relatively short-lived, left a lasting impact on the Indian subcontinent, particularly in the realms of administration, infrastructure, and military organization. Here's an overview of Sher Shah Suri's life, achievements, and contributions:

Early Life and Rise to Power

1. Birth and Background:

- Sher Shah Suri was born as Farid Khan in 1486 in Sasaram, Bihar, into a noble Afghan family.
- His family was associated with the service of the ruling Afghan Lodi dynasty in Delhi.

2. Service under Babur and Humayun:

- Farid Khan initially served under the Mughal Emperor Babur and later joined the service of his successor, Emperor Humayun.

3. Rebellion against Humayun:

- Dissatisfied with his position and inspired by his ambitions, Farid Khan rebelled against Humayun's rule and declared himself an independent ruler in 1539.

Reign as Sher Shah Suri

1. Coronation and Title:

- After declaring independence, Farid Khan assumed the title of Sher Shah (Lion King) and established the Sur dynasty, also known as the Suri dynasty.

2. Administrative Reforms:

- Sher Shah implemented numerous administrative reforms aimed at improving governance and revenue administration.
- He introduced the system of land revenue assessment based on measurement of land, known as the "Zabt" system, which later became the basis for the Mughal revenue system under Akbar.

3. Infrastructure Development:

- Sher Shah initiated large-scale infrastructure projects, including the construction of roads, bridges, and sarais (rest-houses) along major trade routes.
- The Grand Trunk Road, also known as the "Sadak-e-Azam," was one of his most significant achievements, connecting Bengal in the east to the Indus River in the west.

4. Military Reforms:

- Sher Shah reorganized the military administration, introducing the concept of the "Dagh" (branding) system for soldiers to ensure discipline and loyalty.
- He also improved the efficiency of the artillery and introduced the use of gunpowder in warfare.

5. Coinage and Currency:

- Sher Shah standardized the currency system and introduced the silver coin known as the "Rupiya," which became the basis for the modern Indian rupee.

Military Campaigns and Expansion

1. Conquests:

- Sher Shah undertook several military campaigns to expand his empire. He conquered territories in present-day Bihar, Bengal, Punjab, and parts of Central India.
- His most notable conquest was the capture of the Mughal stronghold of Delhi in 1540, forcing Humayun into exile.

2. Control over Northern India:

- Sher Shah established control over a vast empire in northern India, consolidating his rule and establishing a stable administration.

Death and Legacy

1. Death:

- Sher Shah Suri died in 1545 due to injuries sustained during the siege of Kalinjar fort in present-day Uttar Pradesh.

He was succeeded by his son, Islam Shah Suri, who ruled for a brief period after his father's death. Death of Sher Shah

In 1545, Sher Shah Suri was killed by a gunpowder explosion while laying siege to Kalinjar fort. Sher Shah Suri died in 1545 after a five-year reign, yet he constructed a massive empire and a magnificent and powerful government. The mausoleum he erected for himself in Sasaram is an architectural wonder.

2. Legacy:

- Sher Shah Suri's reign is remembered for his administrative innovations, infrastructure development, and military prowess.
- His reforms laid the groundwork for the efficient administration of the Mughal Empire under Akbar, who admired Sher Shah's administrative system and adopted many of his policies.
- Sher Shah's contributions to Indian history earned him a revered place among the great rulers of medieval India, and his legacy continues to be celebrated in modern India.

Mughal Administration

The Mughal Empire, which spanned much of the Indian subcontinent from the 16th to the 19th centuries, is renowned for its significant achievements in various domains, including administration, architecture, art, literature, and culture. Here's an overview of the Mughal achievements and their administrative system:

Achievements of the Mughal Empire

1. Architectural Marvels:

- The Mughals are celebrated for their architectural achievements, including the iconic Taj Mahal, built by Emperor Shah Jahan in memory of his wife Mumtaz Mahal.

- Other notable structures include the Red Fort in Delhi, the Agra Fort, Fatehpur Sikri, and numerous mosques, mausoleums, and gardens across the empire.
- 2. Art and Culture:
 - The Mughal Empire patronized art and culture, leading to the development of exquisite miniature paintings, illuminated manuscripts, and ornate calligraphy.
 - Mughal rulers were also great patrons of music, poetry, and literature, fostering a rich cultural environment at their courts.
- 3. Literature and Poetry:
 - Mughal emperors, such as Akbar and Shah Jahan, were known for their patronage of scholars and poets. The Mughal court became a center of literary excellence, with poets like Amir Khusrau, Abdul Rahim Khan-i-Khana, and Mir Taqi Mir flourishing under their patronage.
- 4. Military and Warfare:
 - The Mughals maintained a formidable military force, consisting of infantry, cavalry, artillery, and war elephants.
 - They employed advanced military tactics, including the effective use of cannons and muskets, which played a crucial role in their military campaigns and conquests.
- 5. Economic Prosperity:
 - The Mughal Empire presided over a period of economic prosperity, facilitated by the establishment of a vast network of trade routes and the promotion of commerce and industry.
 - The empire's control over lucrative trade routes, particularly in textiles, spices, and precious stones, contributed to its economic wealth and stability.

Mughal Administration

- 1. Centralized Administration:
 - The Mughal Empire was characterized by a highly centralized administrative system, with the emperor as the supreme authority.
 - The empire was divided into provinces (subahs) administered by governors (subahdars) appointed by the emperor. Each province was further subdivided into districts (sarkars) and smaller administrative units.
- 2. Revenue System:
 - The Mughal revenue system was based on the land revenue system introduced by Sher Shah Suri. Land revenue was the primary source of income for the empire, and it was assessed based on the productivity of the land.
 - The empire employed revenue officials known as zamindars and revenue officers (amils) to collect taxes and maintain revenue records.
- 3. Military Administration:
 - The Mughal military was organized into a hierarchical structure, with the emperor at the top as the commander-in-chief.
 - The empire maintained a standing army comprising infantry, cavalry, artillery, and war elephants. The army was supplemented by local levies and tribal militias.
- 4. Justice and Legal System:
 - The Mughal Empire had a well-developed system of justice, with qazis (judges) presiding over courts of law. Islamic law (Sharia) served as the basis for legal proceedings, although local customs and traditions were also respected.
 - The emperor appointed a chief qazi (qazi-ul-quzat) to oversee the administration of justice across the empire.
- 5. Bureaucracy and Administration:

- The Mughal administration was supported by a complex bureaucracy comprising various officials, including diwans (finance ministers), wazirs (prime ministers), and mir bakshis (military commanders).
- Each administrative department was headed by a senior official responsible for its functioning and management.

Legacy of Mughal Administration

1. Administrative Efficiency:

- The Mughal administrative system was renowned for its efficiency and sophistication, enabling the empire to govern a vast and diverse territory with relative stability and order.
- Many aspects of the Mughal administrative system, such as revenue assessment and military organization, served as models for subsequent Indian rulers, including the British colonial administration.

2. Cultural Syncretism:

- The Mughal Empire promoted cultural syncretism by fostering interactions between different religious and cultural communities.
- Mughal rulers, such as Akbar, adopted a policy of religious tolerance and encouraged the integration of diverse cultural traditions into the fabric of the empire.

3. Architectural and Artistic Legacy:

- The Mughal Empire's architectural and artistic achievements continue to inspire awe and admiration, serving as enduring symbols of India's rich cultural heritage.
- Mughal architecture, characterized by its grandeur, symmetry, and intricate ornamentation, remains a defining feature of India's architectural landscape.

4. Literary and Intellectual Flourishing:

- The Mughal court was a center of intellectual and artistic flourishing, nurturing some of the greatest minds in literature, poetry, music, and philosophy.
- The legacy of Mughal patronage of literature and the arts continues to influence Indian cultural life to this day, shaping perceptions of beauty, creativity, and cultural identity.

Religion and Culture Bhakti movement and Sufi Tradition: Saint Tradition in India.

Guru Nanak, Kabir, Tulsidas, Meerabai.

1-Architecture of Sultanate Period.

2-Architecture of Mughal Period.

The Bhakti movement and the Sufi tradition are both significant religious and cultural movements that emerged in the medieval period in India and the Islamic world respectively. While they developed within different religious contexts—Bhakti within Hinduism and Sufism within Islam—they share some common characteristics and goals.

Bhakti Movement:

Devotion (Bhakti):

The Bhakti movement emphasized personal devotion (bhakti) to a chosen deity, often as a means to attain spiritual liberation (moksha).

Rejecting Ritualism: Bhakti saints often rejected the elaborate rituals and caste-based distinctions prevalent in Hindu society. They advocated for a direct and personal relationship with the divine, transcending social barriers.

Language of Expression: The Bhakti saints composed devotional poetry in vernacular languages such as Tamil, Telugu, Hindi, and Bengali, making religious teachings accessible to the masses.

Equality: Bhakti emphasized the equality of all devotees before God, regardless of caste, gender, or social status.

Prominent Figures: Notable Bhakti saints include Ramanuja, Kabir, Mirabai, Chaitanya Mahaprabhu, and Tulsidas.

Sufi Tradition:

Mystical Path: Sufism is the mystical dimension of Islam, focusing on the inner, spiritual dimension of the faith. Sufis seek a direct personal experience of the divine (Allah).

Sufi Orders (Tariqas): Sufism is organized into various orders or brotherhoods, each with its own spiritual practices and teachings. These orders often trace their lineage back to a founding saint or master (shaykh).

Love and Devotion: Like Bhakti, Sufism emphasizes love and devotion (ishq) as the central elements of the spiritual journey. Sufi poets expressed their longing for God through poetry, music, and dance.

Unity of Being: Sufism teaches the concept of "Unity of Being" (wahdat al-wujud), asserting that all existence is a manifestation of the divine essence.

Prominent Figures: Famous Sufi saints include Rumi, Ibn Arabi, Al-Ghazali, Jalaluddin Balkhi (popularly known as Rumi), and Rabia al-Basri.

Commonalities:

Focus on Love and Devotion: Both movements emphasize the importance of love and devotion in the spiritual quest, advocating for a personal and intimate connection with the divine.

Rejection of Formalism: Both Bhakti and Sufism reject rigid formalism and emphasize the inner, experiential aspect of religion over mere ritualistic practices.

Social Impact: Both movements had a significant social impact by promoting egalitarianism, inclusivity, and compassion, challenging social hierarchies and promoting unity among diverse communities.

Overall, while originating in different religious contexts, the Bhakti movement and the Sufi tradition share a deep spiritual resonance, emphasizing love, devotion, and the quest for inner realization.

The concept of saints in India is deeply ingrained in its religious and cultural fabric, transcending specific religious boundaries. Saints in India are revered figures known for their spiritual wisdom, devotion, selflessness, and often miraculous powers. They play a crucial role in the religious landscape, acting as guides, inspirations, and embodiments of divine virtues for their followers. Here's an overview of the saint tradition in India:

Hindu Saints:

Gurus and Rishis: In Hinduism, saints are often revered as gurus (spiritual teachers) or rishis (seers). They are believed to possess deep spiritual insight and knowledge (jnana).

Bhakti Saints: The Bhakti movement gave rise to numerous saints across India who emphasized devotion (bhakti) to a chosen deity. Saints like Kabir, Mirabai, Tulsidas, Sant Tukaram, and Chaitanya Mahaprabhu are revered for their devotional poetry and teachings.

Ascetics and Yogis: Ascetic saints, known as sadhus or yogis, renounce worldly possessions and dedicate their lives to spiritual pursuits. They often reside in ashrams or wander from place to place.

Avatars and Incarnations: Some saints are believed to be incarnations of divine beings. For example, saints like Ramakrishna Paramahansa and Swami Vivekananda are considered avatars of the divine in the tradition of Advaita Vedanta.

Sikh Gurus:

Guru Nanak Dev Ji: The founder of Sikhism and the first of the ten Sikh Gurus, Guru Nanak emphasized the importance of devotion to one God, equality, and service to humanity.

Guru Granth Sahib: The holy scripture of Sikhism, Guru Granth Sahib, contains the teachings of

Gurudwaras: Sikh saints are venerated in gurudwaras, Sikh places of worship, where devotees gather to recite hymns, meditate, and engage in selfless service (seva).

Muslim Sufi Saints:

Dargahs: Sufi saints in India are revered at dargahs, shrines built over their tombs. These dargahs serve as centers of spiritual pilgrimage and communal gatherings, fostering an atmosphere of love, devotion, and inclusivity.

Qawwali: Qawwali, a devotional music form, is often performed at Sufi shrines as a means of expressing love for God and the saints. It creates a mystical atmosphere conducive to spiritual contemplation.

Chishti, Suhrawardi, and other Orders: Various Sufi orders, such as the Chishti and Suhrawardi orders, have left a profound impact on Indian spirituality. Prominent Sufi saints like Khwaja Moinuddin Chishti, Nizamuddin Auliya, and Baba Farid are venerated across the country.

Jain and Buddhist Saints:

Tirthankaras: In Jainism, Tirthankaras are considered enlightened beings who guide others on the path to liberation (moksha). Mahavira, the 24th Tirthankara, is revered as the founder of Jainism.

Buddhist Masters: In Buddhism, figures like Gautama Buddha and Bodhisattvas such as Avalokiteshvara and Tara are revered as enlightened beings who embody compassion and wisdom.

Common Characteristics:

Selflessness: Saints are known for their selfless service to humanity, often sacrificing personal comfort for the welfare of others.

Universal Love: They espouse the ideals of love, compassion, and inclusivity, transcending sectarian boundaries.

Spiritual Guidance: Saints provide spiritual guidance and inspiration to their followers, helping them navigate the complexities of life and attain spiritual growth.

In India, the saint tradition reflects the diverse spiritual heritage of the country, encompassing a wide array of religious and philosophical perspectives united by the common pursuit of spiritual realization and divine love.

Guru Nanak Dev Ji, born in 1469 in the village of Talwandi (now Nankana Sahib in Pakistan), is the founder of Sikhism and the first of the ten Sikh Gurus. His life and teachings have had a profound impact on Sikhism and continue to inspire millions of people around the world. Here are some key aspects of Guru Nanak's life and teachings:

Early Life and Spiritual Awakening:

Birth and Family: Guru Nanak was born into a Hindu family. From a young age, he displayed a deep spiritual inclination and a questioning mind.

Divine Revelation: According to Sikh tradition, Guru Nanak had a profound spiritual experience at the age of 30 when he disappeared into the river for three days. Upon emerging, he declared, "There is no Hindu, there is no Muslim," emphasizing the universality of spiritual truth.

Teachings and Philosophy:

Oneness of God: Guru Nanak preached the concept of "Ik Onkar" (One God), emphasizing the monotheistic nature of Sikhism and the unity of all existence.

Equality: He rejected caste and religious distinctions, advocating for the equality of all human beings regardless of caste, creed, gender, or social status.

Service and Compassion: Guru Nanak emphasized the importance of selfless service (seva) and compassion towards all living beings as essential aspects of spiritual practice.

Nam Simran and Naam Japna: He taught the importance of meditation on the divine Name (Naam Japna) as a means to attain spiritual liberation and inner peace.

Three Pillars: Guru Nanak outlined three primary principles of Sikhism: Naam Japna (meditation on God's name), Kirat Karni (honest living and work), and Vand Chakna (sharing with others).

Journeys and Dialogue:

Travels: Guru Nanak embarked on extensive travels known as Udasis, spreading his message of love, peace, and social equality to distant lands including Mecca, Baghdad, Tibet, and Sri Lanka.

Interfaith Dialogue: He engaged in dialogues with scholars, saints, and religious leaders of various traditions, promoting understanding and harmony among different faiths.

Legacy:

Formation of Sikhism: Guru Nanak laid the foundation of Sikhism, a distinct religious tradition that combines elements of monotheism, meditation, and ethical living.

Guru Granth Sahib: His teachings and compositions, along with those of subsequent Sikh Gurus and selected saints, were compiled into the Guru Granth Sahib, the holy scripture of Sikhism.

Community Building: Guru Nanak established the framework for Sikh community life, including the concept of sangat (community congregation) and pangat (community kitchen).

Guru Nanak's life and teachings continue to serve as a guiding light for Sikhs and people of all backgrounds, inspiring them to lead a life of righteousness, compassion, and devotion to the Divine. His message of universal love and equality remains relevant and impactful in the modern world.

Kabir, often referred to simply as Saint Kabir, was a mystic poet, saint, and philosopher who lived in India during the 15th century. His teachings have profoundly influenced both Hinduism and Islam, as well as the Bhakti movement. Here's an overview of Kabir's life and teachings:

Life and Background:

Mysterious Origins: Kabir's exact date of birth and parentage are unclear. Legend has it that he was born to Muslim parents and adopted by a Hindu family.

Varied Influence: He was deeply influenced by both Hinduism and Islam, as well as the teachings of various saints and mystics.

Weaver by Profession: Kabir worked as a weaver by trade, and his humble occupation is often referenced in his poetry.

Teachings and Philosophy:

Oneness of God: Kabir emphasized the oneness of God, transcending the boundaries of religious labels. He often referred to the divine by various names, such as Ram, Allah, Hari, or Khuda.

Rejecting Religious Dogma: Kabir critiqued ritualism, caste distinctions, and religious hypocrisy, advocating for a direct and personal connection with the divine.

Unity of Humanity: He preached the unity of all human beings, asserting that all are children of the same divine reality.

Inner Journey: Kabir emphasized the importance of inner reflection and spiritual realization over external practices.

Love and Devotion: His poetry is filled with themes of love, devotion, and longing for union with the divine.

Literary Contributions:

Dohas and Bhajans: Kabir's teachings are primarily conveyed through his dohas (couplets) and bhajans (devotional songs), composed in vernacular Hindi.

Accessible Language: He used simple and accessible language, making his teachings understandable to people from all walks of life.

Legacy of Poetry: Kabir's poetry continues to be sung and recited across India and has been translated into numerous languages.

Legacy and Influence:

Bhakti Movement: Kabir is regarded as one of the most significant figures of the Bhakti movement, which emphasized devotion to a personal God.

Sufi Influence: His teachings also bear similarities to Sufi mysticism, particularly in his emphasis on love, devotion, and the unity of all existence.

Spiritual Unity: Kabir's message of spiritual unity and inclusivity has resonated with people of diverse backgrounds, transcending religious and cultural boundaries.

Sant Mat Tradition: Kabir is considered one of the key figures in the Sant Mat tradition, which emphasizes the importance of a living spiritual master in guiding seekers on the path to spiritual realization.

Kabir's timeless teachings continue to inspire seekers of truth and lovers of poetry worldwide. His message of love, unity, and inner realization remains as relevant today as it was in his time, serving as a beacon of hope and wisdom for humanity.

Tulsidas, also known as Goswami Tulsidas, was a prominent saint, poet, philosopher, and devotee of Lord Rama who lived in India during the 16th century. He is best known for his epic poem "Ramcharitmanas," which retells the story of Lord Rama, a central figure in Hindu mythology, in the Awadhi dialect of Hindi. Here's an overview of Tulsidas's life and contributions:

Life and Background:

Birth and Early Life: Tulsidas was born in 1532 in Rajapur, a village in present-day Uttar Pradesh, India. His birthplace is now known as Tulsipur.

Spiritual Journey: Tulsidas had a deep spiritual inclination from a young age. He renounced worldly life and embarked on a pilgrimage, seeking the grace of Lord Rama.

Devotion to Lord Rama: Throughout his life, Tulsidas remained devoted to Lord Rama, considering him the ultimate divine manifestation.

Contributions and Works:

Ramcharitmanas: Tulsidas's most famous work is the "Ramcharitmanas," an epic poem composed in the Awadhi dialect of Hindi. It retells the story of Lord Rama, emphasizing the importance of devotion (bhakti) to God and the virtues of righteousness and dharma.

Hanuman Chalisa: Tulsidas also composed the "Hanuman Chalisa," a devotional hymn dedicated to Lord Hanuman, the devoted disciple of Lord Rama. It is widely recited by Hindus around the world.

Other Works: Apart from the "Ramcharitmanas" and "Hanuman Chalisa," Tulsidas wrote numerous other devotional works, philosophical treatises, and poems.

Philosophy and Teachings:

Bhakti and Devotion: Tulsidas emphasized the path of devotion (bhakti) to Lord Rama as the supreme means of attaining spiritual liberation.

Simplicity and Accessibility: His writings are known for their simplicity, accessibility, and deep spiritual wisdom, making them accessible to people from all walks of life.

Morality and Virtue: Tulsidas's works stress the importance of leading a virtuous and righteous life in accordance with dharma (duty/righteousness).

Legacy and Influence:

Cultural Impact: Tulsidas's "Ramcharitmanas" has had a profound impact on Hindu culture, literature, and spirituality. It is considered one of the greatest literary works in Hindi literature.

Devotional Practices: His compositions, including the "Hanuman Chalisa," are widely revered and recited by millions of devotees, inspiring deep devotion and reverence for Lord Rama and Hanuman.

Sant Tradition: Tulsidas is regarded as a prominent figure in the Bhakti movement and the Sant tradition, which emphasizes personal devotion to God and the teachings of saintly figures.

Philosophical Influence: His teachings continue to inspire seekers of truth and spiritual aspirants, emphasizing the importance of love, devotion, and righteous living.

Tulsidas's life and works continue to be celebrated and revered by millions of people, serving as a source of inspiration, guidance, and spiritual solace for generations.

Mirabai, also known as Meera Bai or Meera, was a 16th-century saint, poet, and devotee of Lord Krishna who is widely regarded as one of the most significant figures in the Bhakti movement of India. Her life and poetry continue to inspire millions of people with their devotion, love, and spiritual fervor. Here's an overview of Mirabai's life and contributions:

Life and Background:

Birth and Early Life: Mirabai was born in 1498 in Kurki, a village in present-day Rajasthan, India. She was born into the Rathore royal family of Merta.

Marriage to Bhoj Raj: Mirabai was married to Bhoj Raj, the crown prince of Mewar, at a young age. Despite her royal status, she became renowned for her intense devotion to Lord Krishna.

Devotion to Lord Krishna: Mirabai's devotion to Lord Krishna was evident from her childhood. She considered Krishna to be her divine husband and dedicated her life to his worship.

Detachment from Worldly Attachments: She advocated for detachment from worldly attachments and the pursuit of spiritual realization as the ultimate goal of life.

Radical Devotion: Mirabai's devotion to Lord Krishna often defied social norms and conventions. She faced opposition and persecution from her family and society due to her unwavering devotion.

Legacy and Influence:

Icon of Devotion: Mirabai is revered as an icon of devotion and love for Lord Krishna. Her life serves as a timeless example of unwavering faith and surrender to the divine.

Cultural Impact: Her bhajans and poetry have left a profound impact on Indian culture and spirituality, inspiring generations of devotees, poets, and musicians.

Role of Women: Mirabai's life challenged traditional gender roles and stereotypes, demonstrating the power of women's spiritual devotion and their ability to transcend societal limitations.

Unity in Diversity: Despite being a Hindu saint, Mirabai's poetry resonates with people of diverse religious backgrounds, emphasizing the universality of spiritual love and devotion.

Mirabai's legacy continues to inspire people around the world, reminding them of the transformative power of love, devotion, and surrender to the divine. Her bhajans and poetry remain an integral part of India's cultural and spiritual heritage, providing solace and inspiration to countless devotees on their spiritual journey.

The Sultanate period in India, which lasted from the 13th to the 16th century, witnessed the emergence of distinctive architectural styles that combined indigenous Indian traditions with influences from Central Asia, Persia, and other Islamic regions. The architecture of the Sultanate period is characterized by the construction of mosques, tombs, forts, palaces, and other monumental structures, showcasing the cultural and artistic exchanges between different communities and regions. Here are some key features and examples of Sultanate period architecture:

Indo-Islamic Architectural Features:

Islamic Influence: Sultanate architecture reflects Islamic architectural elements such as domes, minarets, arches, and intricate geometric patterns.

Incorporation of Local Traditions: Islamic architectural styles were fused with indigenous Indian architectural traditions, resulting in unique hybrid forms.

Use of Local Materials: Buildings were constructed using locally available materials such as red sandstone, marble, and granite, reflecting regional variations in architectural aesthetics.

Courtyard Layout: Many structures featured a central courtyard surrounded by arcades, with the main prayer hall or tomb chamber located at one end.

Calligraphy and Ornamentation: Arabic calligraphy and decorative motifs adorned the facades and interiors of buildings, expressing religious inscriptions and Quranic verses.

Water Features: Gardens, fountains, and reflecting pools were often incorporated into the design of architectural complexes, symbolizing paradise and providing relief from the hot climate.

Examples of Sultanate Period Architecture:

Qutb Complex, Delhi: The Qutb Minar, a UNESCO World Heritage Site, is the most famous monument in the Qutb complex. It is a towering minaret built by Qutb-ud-din Aibak, the first ruler of the Delhi Sultanate, in the early 13th century. The complex also includes the Quwwat-ul-Islam Mosque, which features intricate carvings and columns from earlier Hindu and Jain temples.

Alai Darwaza, Delhi: Built by Alauddin Khalji in the 14th century, the Alai Darwaza is an imposing gateway constructed using red sandstone and white marble. It is known for its intricate geometric patterns and calligraphic inscriptions.

Tughlaqabad Fort, Delhi: Constructed by Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq in the 14th century, Tughlaqabad Fort is a massive fortress built in the Tughlaq architectural style, featuring high walls, bastions, and a grand entrance.

Adhai Din Ka Jhonpra, Ajmer: Located in Ajmer, Rajasthan, this mosque was originally a Sanskrit college. It was converted into a mosque by Qutb-ud-din Aibak and features a blend of Hindu and Islamic architectural elements.

Gol Gumbaz, Bijapur: Built in the 17th century during the later part of the Sultanate period, Gol Gumbaz is a mausoleum of Sultan Muhammad Adil Shah. It is known for its massive dome, whispering gallery, and intricately carved mihrab (prayer niche).

Legacy and Influence:

Sultanate period architecture laid the foundation for subsequent Mughal architecture, influencing iconic structures such as the Taj Mahal and Red Fort.

It contributed to the cultural and architectural heritage of India, showcasing the syncretic nature of Indian society and the interplay between different religious and cultural traditions.

Many Sultanate period monuments are UNESCO World Heritage Sites and continue to attract tourists and scholars interested in India's rich architectural history.

The architecture of the Sultanate period remains a testament to the artistic and cultural achievements of medieval India, reflecting the diverse influences and dynamic exchanges that shaped the region's built environment.

4.1.1 Introduction

The medieval period of Indian history was a period of synthesis amongst various cultures. The traditions brought by the Turks and Mughals assimilated with Indian traditions and enriched the Indian culture. The assimilation of Turkish elements with Indian ones began almost immediately. The Turks coming from Central and West Asia, required places for living and worshipping. Hence they converted some existing temples into houses and mosques. In later years, when new constructions were made, indigenous craftsmen were employed. Hence the monuments of the Sultanate came to reflect a happy mingling of Indian and Turkish elements. The architectural developments under the Delhi Sultanate can be divided into –the first phase till the end of the Khalji dynasty. The second phase was of the Tughlaqs. The third was under the Lodis.

4.1.2 The First Phase (c.1206-1320 A.D.) The first phase of the architectural developments under the Delhi Sultanate extended till the end of the Khalji dynasty. The most significant aspect of this period was the development of an IndoIslamic style. The arch and dome which were commonly used by the Turks replaced the flat roofed structures of the Indians. The Turks constructed many lofty and impressive buildings by providing them with a dome. The height of a square building was raised by fitting a dome on it. The arch and dome did away with the need of a large number of pillars to support the roof. They enabled the construction of large halls which could be used for assemblies and prayers. Such structural features necessitated the use of good quality mortar in the buildings. The Turks brought new decorative styles. No human and animal representation was used since this was considered unIslamic. The buildings were beautified by use of geometrical and floral designs as well as verses from the Quran. This combination of decorative features was called 'arbesque'. Besides this, the Turks freely used Hindu motif and features. The bell, swastika, lotus, water-pots are seen in the structures of the Delhi Sultanate. The Turks further decorated their buildings by using colour. Red sandstone was commonly used while yellow sandstone and marble was used to highlight some particular features. The greatest architectural achievement of the Mamluk Sultans was the Qutub Minar. This tower symbolized the victory of the Turkish forces. The Minar was planned and begun by Aibak and completed by Iltutmish. It was dedicated to Sufi saint Qutab-ud-din Bhaktiyar Kaki, who was greatly respected by the people of Delhi. The Minar has four storeys, separated by projecting balconies. It gets its strength mainly from the skillful manner in which balconies have been projected, yet linked and their weight transferred to the main tower. It has bands of richly carved inscriptions from the Quran. It has tapering cylindrical flute shape which gives it the illusion of increased height.

INSCRIPTIONS FROM THE QURAN CARVED ON QUTAB MINAR, DELHI

The process of experimentation under the Delhi Sultanate is reflected in the Tomb of Iltutmish. The form employed in Iltutmish' tomb is Squinch Arch (rounding off the upper angles of a square room so as to form a base to receive an octagonal or spherical dome). Another significant architectural development was the appearance of True Arch for the first time in the Tomb of Balban.

THE SQUINCH ARCH OF THE TOMB OF ILTUTMISH, DELHI FIG

THE TOMB OF BALBAN MARKED THE FIRST APPEARANCE OF TRUE ARCH IN INDIA

The Khalji dynasty initiated ambitious building projects. A monument occupying a key position in the evolution of Islamic architecture under the Khaljis was the Alai Darwaza erected in 1305 by Alauddin Khalji. This was southern entrance gateway to the Qutab Mosque. The Alai Darwaza contains a dome that for the first time was built on correct scientific lines. The Darwaza also contains many arches (keel). Alauddin also built his capital at Siri, the second of seven successive cities of Delhi. Unfortunately hardly anything of this city survives today.

The Second Phase (c.1320-1414 A.D.) The second phase of architectural developments under the Delhi Sultanate belonged to the Tughlaqs. By this time the Indo-Islamic style of architecture had emerged as an independent style. New features of Tughlaq architecture include rough construction, solid structures with sloping walls and use of batter to sustain the increased height and loftiness of the Tughlaq domes. However we do not find any batter in the buildings of Firuz Shah Tughlaq. A second feature of the Tughlaq architecture was the deliberate attempt to combine the principle of the arch, lintel and beam in the buildings. Thirdly, the Tughlaqs generally did not use the costly red sandstone in their buildings but chose the cheaper and more easily available grey stones. The Tughlaq buildings came to have a minimum decoration, for it was not easy to carve the grey stones. A decorative device found in Tughlaqs was the use of Hindu motifs. The water pot and lotus was often used.

TOMB OF GHIYASUDDIN TUGHLAQ, DELHI

Ghiyasuddin's efforts in the field of architecture lay in the creation of the third city of Delhi, known as Tughlaqabad. It was the first of such great complexes – combining a city, fort and palace. Further the Tomb of Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq marks a new trend in architecture. The Tomb was put on a high platform to give it an increasing height and skyline. White marble dome and red sandstone were used to beautify it. The dome's design is of the pointed or 'Tartar' shaped which later became characteristics of the Indo-Islamic style as a whole. The archway of Ghiyasuddin's tomb reveals a new trend by combining the two principles of support-the arch and the beam. The tomb looks like a fortress and has been described as 'warrior's tomb'. Ghiyasuddin's successor Muhammad Bin Tughlaq built the fourth city of Delhi named 'Jahanpanah'.

THE RUINS OF JAHAPANAH, THE FOURTH CITY OF DELHI BUILT BY MUHAMMAD BIN TUGHLAQ

The greatest builder of the Tughlaq dynasty was Firuz Shah Tughlaq. In 1354 he built the fifth city of Delhi, Firuzabad. It contained a palace called Kushk-i-Firuz and a citadel called Kotla Firuz Shah. He also built Hauz Khas. He added two more storeys to Qutab Minar. According to a contemporary source his city had 8 Jama Masjids and 120 inns. A new type of tomb architecture is seen in the tomb of Khan-i-Jahan Tilangani, a noble and prime minister in the reign of Firuz Tughlaq. Instead of square the tomb was octagonal in shape. Moreover, an earlier application of the chhajja or eaves board was also seen in the tomb.

The Third Phase (c.1451-1526 A.D.) The third phase of architectural developments of the Delhi Sultanate was under the Lodis. The Lodis developed the tradition of Indo-Islamic art further. Both the arch and lintel and beam method were used in their buildings. Balconies, kiosks and eaves of the Rajasthani and Gujrati style were also used. Another device used by the Lodis was placing their buildings especially tombs, on a high platform thus giving the building a more imposing look. In some cases gardens were laid out around the tombs. The Lodi gardens at Delhi are the finest examples of this. The most significant structural alteration under the Lodis was seen in the Tomb of Sikander Lodi in the Lodi gardens at Delhi. Earlier the tomb was constructed solely on the thickness of stone work. But in Sikander Lodi's tomb, the dome is composed of an inner and outer shell of masonry, with a distinct space between the two. This was the first application of Double Dome architecture. By this method the height of the dome was raised to present a loftier and more imposing structure. Later most of the larger domes of the Mughal period were constructed on this principle.

ARCHITECTURE The most important source 'for the study of architecture is the surviving remains of buildings themselves. Though these enable us to grasp architectural techniques and styles peculiar to our period, it offers little help in understanding other related aspects of architecture such as the role of the architects and the drawings and estimates and accounts of the buildings. 31.2.1 New Structural Forms i) Arch and Dome :Do a careful reading of the reports prepared by General Alexander Cunningham of archaeological sites and remains (Reports of the Archaeological Survey of India, vols.

I-XXIII, Simla, Calcutta, 1865-77) in Northern India, we observe that the incidence of masonry building-including civilian housing in towns-increases significantly after the 13th century. This was primarily possible due to the use of lime-mortar as the basic cementing material about which you have already read in Unit 22. The building of true arch required stones or bricks to be laid as voussoirs in the shape of a curve and bound together firmly by a good binding material. The binding material was lime-mortar. (figure 1 gives the diagram of an arch.) The result of the introduction of the new technique was that the pre-Turkish forms, lintel and beam and corbelling, were replaced by true arches and vaults and the spired roofs (shikhars) by domes. Arches are made in a variety of shapes, but in India the pointed form of the Islamic world was directly inherited. And sometime in second quarter of the 14th century, another variant of the pointed form, the four-centred arch, was introduced by the Tughluqs in their buildings. It remained in vogue till the end of the Sultanate. (These forms have been illustrated in figure 2.) The pointed arch was adopted in the Islamic world quite early due to its durability and ease of construction. The usual method of raising a pointed arch was to erect a light centering and place one layer of bricks over it. This layer supported another thin layer of flat bricks over which radiating voussoirs of the arch were fixed in mortar. These two bottom layers of brick-work would, if needed, act as permanent shuttering for the arch (as shown in Figure 3). It may be noted here that the employment of bricks instead of an all-wood centering was a feature typical of regions deficient in reserves of wood such as West Asia and even India. But the construction of dome demanded especial techniques. The problem was to find a suitable method for converting the square or rectangular top of the walls of the room into a circular base for raising a spherical dome. The best way to overcome this problem was to convert the square plan into a polygon by the use of squinches across the corners (shown in figure 3). Later, in the fifteenth century, stalactite pendentives came to be used for the same purpose. (Shown in photo 1 : Bara Fig. 3 Gumbad Mosque, New Delhi.)

Photo 1 Fig. 5 ii) Building Material : It is a curious fact that there are very few instances of early Turkish buildings in India where newly quarried material has been employed by the architects. The fashion was to use richly carved capitals, columns, shafts and lintels from pre-Turkish buildings. In India, towards the beginning of the 14th century when the supply of such material had exhausted, buildings were raised by using originally quarried or manufactured material. In the masonry work, stone has been used abundantly. The foundations are mostly of rough and small rubble or, wherever it is available, of river boulders, while the superstructure is of dressed stone or roughly shaped coarsed stonework. However, in either case, the buildings were plastered all over. Percy Brown (Indian Architecture : Islamic Period, Bombay, 1968) has noted that in the buildings of the Khalji period a new method of stone masonry was used. This consisted of laying stones in two different courses, that is headers and stretchers. This system was retained in subsequent buildings and became a characteristic of the building technique of the Mughals. The material commonly used for plastering buildings was gypsum. Apparently lime-plaster was reserved for places that needed to be secured against the leakage of - water, such as roofs, indigo-vats, canals, drains, etc. In the later period, i.e. around 15th century, when highly finished stucco work became common, gypsum mortar was preferred for plaster work on the walls and the ceiling (as shown in photo 2 below). Buildings served the purpose of revealing it. Since the depiction of living beings was generally frowned upon, the elements of decoration were, in most cases, limited to: a) calligraphy, b) arabesque, and c) foliation. It was by their combination that a rich and sumptuous effect was obtained in the Sultanate buildings. It is characteristically enough no one type of decoration was reserved for a particular type of building; on the contrary, these pan-Islamic decorative principles were used for all kinds of buildings in the Delhi Sultanate. Calligraphy is an important element of the decorative art in the buildings of this period. The Quranic sayings are inscribed on buildings in an angular, sober and monumental script, known as kufi. They may be found in any part of the building—frames of the doors, ceilings, wall panels, niches etc., and in variety of materials—stone, stucco and painting (See the photos 3 & 4 for specimens of stone and stucco calligraphy respectively). Geometric shapes in abstract form are used in these buildings in a bewildering variety of combinations. The motifs indicate incorporation of visual principles: repetition, symmetry, and generation of continuous patterns. It has been suggested by Dalu Jones (Architecture of the Islamic World, ed. George Michell, London, 1978) that the generating source of these geometric designs is the circle, which could be developed into a square, a triangle or a polygon. These forms are then elaborated by multiplication and subdivision, by rotation and by symmetrical arrangements (see, for example, photo 2 supra). Of the foliations, the dominant form of decoration employed in Sultanate buildings, is the arabesque. It is characterised by a continuous stem which splits regularly, producing a series of leafy secondary stems which can in turn split again or reintegrate into the main stem. The repetition of this pattern produces a beautifully balanced design with a three dimensional effect (see figure 4 and photo 5). Art and Architecture of Delhi Sultanate . .

Art and Architecture during Mughals

The Mughal era in India (1526-1857) witnessed remarkable developments in art, architecture, literature, and painting. Mughal art and architecture showcased a unique blend of Persian, Indian, and Central Asian influences.

Architecture: Grand monuments like the Taj Mahal and Red Fort were constructed, exemplifying the exquisite use of marble, intricate carvings, and impressive domes.

Literature: Mughal literature flourished with the patronage of emperors like Akbar and Shah Jahan, producing masterpieces such as the Akbarnama and the poetry of Mirza Ghalib.

Painting: Miniature painting reached its zenith during this period, characterised by delicate brushwork, vibrant colours, and vivid storytelling.

Cultural impact: These artistic achievements left an indelible mark on India's cultural landscape and continue to captivate people to this day.

Architecture of the Mughals

Architectural progress during the Mughals is a landmark in world art. Mughal buildings were noted for the massive structures decorated with bulbous domes, splendorous minarets, cupolas in the four corners, elaborate designs, and pietra dura.

Babur and Humayun: The mosques built during the time of Babur and Humayun are not of much architectural significance.

Sur dynasty: The Sur dynasty left behind a few spectacular specimens: the Purana Qila at Delhi and the tombs of Sher Shah and Islam Shah at Sasaram in Bihar.

The Purana Qila, with a raised citadel and the tombs on a terraced platform surrounded by large tanks, were novel features.

Akbar's contribution:

During Akbar's reign, Humayun's tomb was enclosed with gardens and placed on a raised platform.

Built by Indian artisans and designed by Persian architects, it set a pattern to follow.

The Agra Fort, built with red sandstone, is a specimen where Rajput architectural styles were incorporated.

The new capital city of Akbar Fatehpur Sikri enclosed within its walls several inspiring buildings.

The magnificent gateway to Fatehpur Sikri, the Buland Darwaza, built by Akbar with red sandstone and marble, is considered a perfect architectural achievement.

Jahangir's Contribution:

The mausoleum of Akbar at Sikandra near Agra, started by Akbar and completed by Jahangir, includes some Buddhist architectural elements.

The tomb of Itimad-Ud-Daulah (father of Nurjahan), built by Mughal queen Nur Jahan during Jahangir's reign, was the first Mughal building built entirely with white marble.

Shah Jahan's Contribution: Mughal architecture reached its apex during the reign of Shah

Jahan.

The Taj Mahal is a marble structure on an elevated platform, the bulbous dome in the centre rising on a recessed gateway with four cupolas around the dome and with four free-standing minarets at each of its corners is a monument of universal fame.

The Red Fort in Delhi, encompassed by magnificent buildings like Diwan-i Aam, Diwan-i-Khas, Moti Mahal and Hira Mahal, reflect the architectural skills of the times of Shah Jahan.

The Moti Masjid inside the Agra Fort is made exclusively of marble; the Jama Masjid in Delhi, with its lofty gateway, series of domes and tall and slender minarets, are the two significant mosques built by Shah Jahan.

He also established a new township, Shahjahanabad, where Red Fort and Jama Masjid are located.

Aurangzeb's contribution: Aurangzeb's reign witnessed the construction of Badshahi mosque in Lahore and the marble tomb of Rabia ud Daurani, known as Bibi-ka-maqbara (Tomb of the Lady) at Aurangabad.

Shalimar Gardens: The Shalimar Gardens of Jahangir and Shah Jahan are showpieces of Indian horticulture.

Civil works: Apart from the massive structures, the Mughals contributed many civil works of public utility, the greatest being the bridge over the Gomati River at Jaunpur.

The most impressive feat is the West Yamuna Canal which provided water to Delhi.

Influence on regional architecture: Mughal architecture influenced even temple construction in different parts of the country.

The temple of Govind Dev at Vrindavan near Mathura and Bir Singh's temple of Chaturbhuj at Orchha (Madhya Pradesh) display Mughal influence.

Mughal Painting

The Mughals achieved international recognition in painting.

Tradition: Ancient Indian painting traditions kept alive in provinces like Malwa and Gujarat, along with the Central Asian influences, created a profound impact on the world of painting.

The masters of miniature painting, Abdu's Samad and Mir Sayyid Ali, who had come to India from Central Asia along with Humayun, inspired Indian painters.

Objective: The primary objective of painting was to illustrate literary works.

Miniature painting: Mughal miniatures are an important part of the museums of the world.

Various painters illustrated the Persian text of Mahabharata and Akbar Namah with paintings.

Daswant and Basawan were famous painters of Akbar's court.

European painting was introduced in Akbar's court by Portuguese priests.

During Jahangir's time, portrait painting and the painting of animals had developed. Mansur was a great name in this field.

Mughal miniatures influenced the great Dutch painter Rembrandt.

Decline: While Shah Jahan continued the tradition of painting, Aurangzeb's indifference to painting led to the dispersal of the painters to different parts of the country, thereby promoting painting in the provinces.

Music and Dance during the Mughal Dynasty

Musicians: According to Ain-i-Akbari, Tansen of Gwalior, credited with composing many ragas, was patronised by Akbar and 35 other musicians.

Royal Patronage: Jahangir and Shah Jahan were patrons of music.

Though there is a popular misconception that Aurangzeb was against music, many books on Indian classical music were written during his regime.

His queens, princes and nobles continued to patronise music.

Later Mughals: The later Mughal Muhammad Shah was instrumental in inspiring important developments in the field of music.

Paintings in Babur Namah and Padshah Namah depict women dancing to accompany musical instruments.

Literature during the Mughals

Persian, Sanskrit and regional languages developed during the Mughal rule.

Persian literature: Persian was the language of administration in the Mughal Empire and the Deccan states. It influenced even the Rajput states, where Persian words were used in administration.

Abul Fazal: He was patronised by Akbar, compiled the history of Akbar in Akbar Nama and described the Mughal administration in his work Ain-i-Akbari.

The Ain-i-Akbari is commendable for its interest in science, statistics, geography and culture.

Abdul Hamid Lahori and Muhammad Waris emulated Akbar Namah in their joint work Padshah Nama, a biography of Shah Jahan.

Later, Muhammad Kazim followed the same pattern in his Alamgir Nama work during the reign of the first decade of Aurangzeb.

Babur's autobiography was written in Chaghatai Turkish and was translated into Persian by Abdur Rahim Khan-e-Khanan.

Dabistan: It is an impartial account of the beliefs and works of different religions.

Translations: Persian literature was enriched by translations of Sanskrit works.

The Mahabharata was translated under the supervision of Abul Faizi, brother of Abul Fazal and a court poet of Akbar.

The translation of Upanishads by Dara Shukoh, entitled Sirr-I-Akbar (the Great Secret), is a landmark.

The Masnawis of Abul Faizi, Utbi and Naziri enriched Persian Poetry in India.

Sanskrit literature: The Sanskrit works produced during the Mughal rule are impressive. Sanskrit literature of this period is noted for the kavyas and historical poetry.

Rajavalipataka, a kavya written by Prajna Bhatta, which completed the history of Kashmir, belonged to the reign of Akbar.

Graeco-Arabic learning was transmitted to India through Persian works in the form of Sanskrit translations.

Akbar's astronomer Nilakantha wrote the Tajika Neelakanthi, an astrological treatise.

Shah Jahan's court poet Jaganatha Panditha wrote the monumental Rasangadhara.

Urdu literature: The most significant contribution in the field of literature during the Mughal rule was the development of Urdu as a common language of communication for people speaking different dialects.

Literature in regional languages: Regional languages acquired stability and maturity, and some of the finest lyrical poetry was produced during this period.

Abdur Rahim Khan-e-Khanan composed Bhakti poetry blending Persian ideas of life and human relations in the Brij form of Hindi.

Tulsidas, who wrote in Awadhi, the Hindi dialect spoken in eastern Uttar Pradesh, was very popular for his devotional ideals.

Marathi literature had an upsurge due to the literary contribution of Eknath, Tukaram, Ramdas and Mukteshwar during this period.

The verses of Tukaram kindled monotheism.

Mukteshwar composed Ramayana and Mahabharata in literary Marathi.

Architectural Development under the Mughal Period Dr. N.R. Giridhar, Associate Professor , Head & BOS, Department of Ancient Indian History Culture & Archaeology, Osmania University, Hyderabad ,Telangana. ABSTRACT The Mughal period (1526-1857) witnessed the development of the Indo-Islamic architecture at a massive scale, dominating the landscape in the northern part of the Indian subcontinent viz Delhi, Agra and Lahore region. By the 15th century, India had already seen the monumental constructions depicting the beautiful blend of the Indian and Turkish architectural styles under the Delhi Sultanate. In this article, we will discuss the art and architecture during the Mughal

Period. The Mughal architecture gave a different dimension to tomb building. These are built on platforms and are surrounded by gardens laid out with ornamental fountains. A famous example is the mosque at Fatehpur Sikri - three domes of 290 ft by 470 ft and with two royal tombs. A unique architectural development in the Mughal time was the beautiful gardens developed around the tombs and other buildings. The Shalimar Gardens in Kashmir and Lahore were developed by Jahangir and Shah Jahan respectively. The Mughals encouraged cultural and architectural growth of India. This paper focus on architectural development in the Mughal dynasty. Keywords: Mughal Period, Delhi Sultanate, Architecture, Monuments, Fatehpursikri, etc., Introduction Mughal art and architecture, a characteristic Indo-Islamic-Persian style that flourished on the Indian subcontinent during the Mughal empire (1526–1857). This new style combined elements of Islamic art and architecture, which had been introduced to India during the Delhi Sultanate (1192–1398) and had produced great monuments such as the Qutb Minar, with features of Persian art and architecture. Mughal monuments are found chiefly in India, but there are also many remains in Pakistan. This article discusses these distinctive forms of art and architecture as they developed under a succession of Mughal emperors. The Mughals constructed excellent Forts, Mosques, Mausoleums, Gardens and Cities. Mughal architecture begins with Akbar who displayed great passion for buildings with meticulous planning and constructing splendid edifices. He made the best use of the Hindu and Persian style of architecture. The salient features of Akbar's buildings are the use of red sandstone inlaid with white marble and painted designs on walls and ceiling. The new Indian Architecture of the Mughal period is called Mughal Architecture. The Mughal architecture was an amalgamation of Persian, Turkic, Timurid Iranian, Central Asian, and Indian Hindu style of architecture. Mughal architecture first developed and flourished during the reign of Akbar. In this period there was extensive use of red sandstone as a building material. Mughal architecture reached its peak during the rule of Shah Jahan. The decline of Mughal architecture began during the rule of Aurangzeb and post his death. The Mughals were known for building beautiful quadrilateral gardens. Some of the most famous Architecture created during the Mughal era are • Taj Mahal – It was built by Shah Jahan between 1632 and 1653, in memory of his wife Mumtaz Mahal. The United Nations Educational Scientific and Cultural Organisation (UNESCO) recognized the Taj Mahal as a World Heritage Site in 1983. It is located in Agra. • Red Fort – UNESCO designated it as the World Heritage Site in 2007. It was built by Shah Jahan when he decided to move the capital from Agra to Delhi. It was the residence of Mughal rulers. • Shalimar Gardens – It is a 40-acre garden built by Shah Jahan in 1642. It was declared a World Heritage Site by UNESCO in 1981. • Jama Masjid – Built by Shah Jahan. The construction was completed in 1656. • Badshahi Mosque – At the time of completion in 1673, it was the largest mosque in the world. It was built during the reign of Aurangzeb. • Humayun's Tomb – It was built in 1570 in memory of Emperor Humayun, it was declared as the world heritage site in 1993. Objectives of the study 1. To analyze the various styles of Mughal architecture 2. To describe the salient features of Mughal architecture 3. To identify the Architectural Development under various Mughal Rulers. 4. To focus on Development of Mughal Architecture Skills in the Mughal Emperors' Period

Methodology The research is based on secondary data. It's an exploratory and descriptive in nature given the nature of the present study, it was required to collect information from the secondary sources. Secondary information was collected from research studies, books, journals, newspapers, ongoing academic working papers and websites of Government of India.

Mughal Architecture: Features & Architectural Development Under the patronage of Mughals, the architecture became more grandiose while retaining its elegance. The Mughal architecture is a distinctive Indo-Islamic architectural style which combines the characteristics of the Persian, Turkish, and the Indian style. The marvelous cities like Fatehpur Sikri and Shahjahanabad were established during their reign along with several majestic forts, mosques, and mausoleums throughout their kingdom.

Important Features of Mughal Architecture

1. Blend of Indian, Persian, and Turkish architectural style.
2. Different types of buildings, such as majestic gates (entrances), forts, mausoleums, palaces, mosques, sarais, etc.
3. Building material: Mostly, red sandstone and white marble were used.
4. Specific features such as the Charbagh style (garden layout) of the mausoleums, pronounced bulbous domes, slender turrets at the corners, broad gateways, beautiful calligraphy, arabesque, and geometric patterns on pillars and walls, and palace halls supported on pillars.

Architectural Development under various Mughal Rulers:

Babur: Due to his short reign (1526-1530), most of which was spent in wars, Babur could not leave any significant construction except the mosque of Kabuli Bagh at Panipat and Jama Masjid at Sambhal near Delhi. He also built Ram Bagh, the first Mughal Garden in India (1528) in Charbagh Style located in Agra.

Humayun: He succeeded Babur, but throughout his reign, he was constantly embroiled in a struggle with Sher Shah Suri. He laid the foundation of the city named Dinpanah but could not finish it. Humayun's Tomb, also known as the precursor of the Taj Mahal was the first imposing structure of the Mughals which was built by his widow Hamida Begum and designed by Persian architect Mirak Mirza Ghiyas. The mausoleum built upon a raised platform is a mix of Indian and Persian artistry using red sandstone and white marble. It has a Persian Charbagh style. The tomb was declared as a UNESCO World Heritage Site in 1993. The Taj Mahal is the climax and therefore perhaps the most famous monument built under the Charbagh layout. Charbagh Style is a Persian style garden layout in which the main building is placed at the center of a quadrilateral garden with shallow water channels neatly dividing the area into smaller park.

Akbar: The reign of Akbar (1556-1605) witnessed immense developments in Mughal art and architecture. He built the city of Fatehpur Sikri which was the first planned city of the Mughals and served as his capital from 1571 to 1585. Buland Darwaza (1576, built to commemorate Akbar's victory over Gujarat kings), Jama Masjid, Diwan-i-aam, Diwan-i-khaas, Birbal's house, Tomb of Saint Salim Chisti are some of the important monuments in Fatehpur Sikri. He also built the Temple of Govind Dev in Vrindavan. Akbar went on to build the entire city of Fatehpur Sikri (City of Victory) in which extensive use was made of the low arches and bulbous domes that characterize the Mughal style. Built in 1571 the choice of the site of Sikri reflected Akbar's gratitude to a Muslim saint at Sikri for the birth of his son. Courtiers soon followed suit and built homes surrounding the palace and mosque. The new city became the capital of the empire, but in 158 it was abandoned. Agra Fort: Agra fort is a UNESCO world heritage site in Agra, Uttar Pradesh. The major part of Agra fort was built by Akbar from 1565 to 1574. The architecture of the fort clearly indicates the free adoption of the Rajput planning and construction. Some of the important buildings in the fort are Jahangiri Mahal built for Jahangir and his family, the Moti Masjid, and Mena Bazaars. The Jahangiri Mahal is an impressive structure and has a courtyard surrounded by double-storeyed halls and rooms. Buland Darwaza, Agra was built by Akbar the Great to commemorate his victory. Buland Darwaza, also known as the Gate of Magnificence, was built by Akbar in 1576 to commemorate his victory over Gujarat and the Deccan. It is 40 metres high and 50 metres from the ground. The total height of the structure is about 54 metres from ground level. Akbar's greatest architectural achievement was the construction of Fatehpur Sikri, his capital city near Agra at a trade and Jain pilgrimages. The construction of the walled city was started in 1569 and completed in 1574. It contained some of the most beautiful buildings – both religious and secular which testify to the Emperor's aim of achieving social, political and religious integration. The main religious buildings were the huge Jama Masjid and small Tomb of Salim Chisti. The Haramsara, the royal seraglio in Fatehpur Sikri was an area where the royal women lived. The opening to the Haramsara is from the Khwabgah side separated by a row of cloisters. According to Abul Fazl, in Ain-i-Akbari, the inside of Harem was guarded by senior and active women, outside the enclosure the eunuchs were placed, and at a proper distance there were faithful Rajput guards. Jodha Bai's Palace is the largest palace in the Fatehpur Sikri seraglio, connected to the minor haramsara quarters. The main entrance is double storied, projecting out of the facade to create a kind of porch leading into a recessed entrance with a balcony. Inside there is a quadrangle surrounded by rooms. The columns of rooms are ornamented with a variety of Hindu sculptural motifs. The tomb of Shaikh Salim Chisti is considered to be one of the finest examples of Mughal architecture built during the years 1580 and 1581. The tomb, built in 1571 in the corner of the mosque compound, is a square marble chamber with a verandah. The cenotaph has an exquisitely designed lattice screen around it. It enshrines the burial place of the Sufi saint, Salim Chisti (1478 – 1572), a descendant of Khwaja Moinuddin Chishti of Ajmer, who lived in a cavern on the ridge at Sikri. The mausoleum, constructed by Akbar as a mark of his respect for the Sufi saint, who foretold the birth of his son. Sidi Saiyyed Mosque Built 1573, Ahmedabad, Gujrat Sidi Saiyyed Mosque one of the finest Architecture of Ahmedabad located in Laldarwaja Ahmedabad. Sidi Saiyed Mosque popularly known as Sidi Saiyyad ni Jali. The mosque was built 1572-73 AD (Hirji Year 980). It was built with sublime ode in stone to the extraordinary architectural legacy of the African diaspora in India. It was built by Sidi Saiyyed a slave of sultan Ahmed shah during Mughal Rule. The mosque is famous for unique carved stone latticework windows. It's symbolic of Ahmedabad like Charminar to Ahmedabad. Under the patronage of Mughal emperors, the architecture of forts and tombs saw a striking resemblance to Islamic architecture. • Persian and Indian styles were intelligently fused to create the works of quality and precision. • Placed in the walled garden enclosure the forts had distinct domes, sleek towers at corners with the magnificent halls in the center supported by pillars and broad entrances. • Delicate ornamentation with arches, decorative sections with fine geometrical designs and inscriptions were major highlights. • The forts had arrangements for soldier barracks, private and public halls for meetings, horse and elephant stables, and gardens at the entrance. An example of which is the Red Fort by Shah Jahan. • Use of decorated colored tiles, painted designs on walls and ceiling, profusely carved doorways show the beautiful detailing and taste of the Emperors. • Extensive use of red sandstone and white marbles is seen in all the buildings of that time. The Tomb of Jahangir at Lahore does not have a dome as Jahangir forbade construction of a dome over his tomb. Rather than building huge monuments like his predecessors to demonstrate their power, Shah Jahan built elegant monuments. The force and originality of this previous building style gave way under Shah Jahan to a delicate elegance and refinement of detail, illustrated in the palaces erected during his reign at Agra, Delhi and Lahore. Some examples include the Taj Mahal at Agra, the tomb of his wife Mumtaz Mahal. The Moti Masjid (Pearl Mosque) in the Agra Fort and the Jama Masjid at Delhi are imposing buildings of his era, and their position and architecture have been carefully considered so as to produce a pleasing effect and feeling of spacious elegance and well-balanced proportion of parts. Shah Jahan also renovated buildings such as the Moti Masjid, Sheesh Mahal and Naulakha pavilion, which are all enclosed in the Lahore Fort. He also built a mosque named after himself in Thatta called Shahjahan Mosque (not built in the Mughal architecture, but in Safavid and Timurid architecture that were influenced by the Persian architecture). Shah Jahan also built the Red Fort in his new capital at Shah Jahanabad, now Old Delhi. The red sandstone Red Fort is noted for its special buildings-Diwan-i-Aam and Diwan-i-Khas. Another mosque was built during his tenure in Lahore called Wazir Khan Mosque, by Shaikh Ilm-ud-din Ansari who was the court physician to the emperor. It is famous for its rich embellishment which covers almost every interior surface. Taj Mahal The Taj Mahal, a World Heritage Site was built between 1630–49 by the emperor Shah Jahan in memory of his wife Mumtaz Mahal. Its construction took 22 years and required 22,000 laborers and 1,000 elephants, at a cost of 32 million rupees. (corresponding to US$ 827 million in 2015) It is a large, white marble structure standing on a square plinth and consists of a symmetrical building with an iwan (an arch-shaped doorway) topped by a large dome and finial. The building's longest plane of symmetry runs through the entire complex except for the sarcophagus of Shah Jahan, which is placed off centre in the crypt room below the main floor. This symmetry is extended to the building of an entire mirror mosque in red sandstone, to complement the Mecca-facing mosque placed to the west of the main structure. Parchin kari, a method of decoration on a large scale-inlaid work of jewels and Jali work has been used to decorate the structure Shalimar Bagh It is a Mughal garden complex located in Lahore, capital of the Pakistani province of Punjab. The gardens date from the period when the Mughal Empire was at its artistic and aesthetic zenith. Construction of the gardens began in 1641 during the reign of Emperor Shah Jahan, and was completed in 1642. In 1981 the Shalimar Gardens were inscribed as a UNESCO World Heritage Site as they embody Mughal garden design at the apogee of its development. Shahi Hammam is a Persian-style bath which was built in Lahore, Pakistan, in 1635 C.E. during the reign of Emperor Shah Jahan. It was built by chief physician to the Mughal Court, Ilam-ud-din Ansari, who was widely known as Wazir Khan. The baths were built to serve as a waqf, or endowment, for the maintenance of the Wazir Khan Mosque. Important developments during Akbar's reign: 1. The architecture at Fatehpur Sikri is an excellent blending of Persian, Central Asian, and various Indian (Bengal and Gujarat) styles. 2. Extensive use of red sandstone. 3. Indian elements such as deep eaves, balconies, and kiosks of the Bengal and Gujrat styles blended with Central Asian component of glazed tiles. Jahangir (1605-1627): • The prince had a special appreciation for the paintings over architecture. He built the tomb of Itimad-udDaula (father of his wife Nur Jahan) displaying the world's finest Pietra-dura works and completed Akbar's tomb at Sikandra. • He also built the famous Shalimar Bagh in Srinagar, Moti Masjid at Lahore. Pietra Dura- also called as Parchin Kari is an inlay technique of pictorial mosaic work using cut and fitted, highly polished semi-precious stones as decorative art Other major styles during the Mughal period were: Sikh Style: Influenced by the Mughal architecture, the style developed in the Punjab region. The arches and chhatris were prominent. The domes became an important feature in the Sikh architecture. Golden Temple completed by Arjan Dev in 1604 is an epitome of Sikh architecture. Rajput Style: It blends local and Islamic styles. They built majestic forts and palaces. The hanging balcony, cornices, and arches were used extensively in the Rajput style of architecture. Under Jahangir, the period saw more and more refinement in brushwork along with the use of lighter and subdued colors. The main themes revolved around the king's own life pictured in Jahangirnama, durbar scenes, portraits, and portrayal of nature. He encouraged his artists to emulate the European style as well in their pieces of work. Aqa Riza, Abul Hasan, Mansur, Bishan Das, Manohar, Goverdhan, Balchand, Daulat, Mukhlis, Bhim, and Inayat were the famous painters in the court of Jahangir. Shah Jahan focussed more on the architecture, though the paintings flourished as well. The paintings of this period lost their sensuousness and became cold and opulent. Aurangzeb did not encourage the paintings' culture, and only a few survive from his court to give an account of the development of the art in his reign. The Mughal paintings greatly influenced the Rajput miniature painting style. Moreover, as the Mughal empire was on the decline, the court artists spread throughout the kingdom and gave rise to new court cultures in the provinces of Awadh, Rajputana, Sikh, and Deccan. Conclusion Mughal emperors were fond of making buildings. Till the period of Shahjahan such buildings were made, which are considered as excellent samples of architectural skills till yet. The art which is called as Mughal architectural art is the combined form of Islam art of mid Asia and Indian Hindu art. Akbar contributed in the production of this art. Akbar's point of view was national in political field, similarly his point of view was national in architecture's field and according to his own desire and facility used Hindu's art and artists in making the buildings. Before him in the period of Delhi Sultans, Islamic art was affected by Hindu's art. Akbar's generosity increased it more. Be in majority of Hindu artists and to construct the buildings according to Indian climate were also become responsible for the origin of Islamic and Hindu's art. So, from the reign of Akbar the art which was developed from the combination of Hindu and Islamic art can be accepted National Architecture Skill. In this architecture skill rounded domes, towers, arch, roofs, columns and pointed arches were taken from Islamic art. Initially, Red stone was used and focus was given on constructing the building very big and strong also, but later on the use of white marble in buildings was included and tried to make those most beautiful by carving, the use of gold-silver water and colorful designs. On adding all of this Mughal Architecture Skill became the best and more beautiful buildings were constructed in this period. The first building constructed in the reign of Akbar is Humayun ka Makabara in Delhi. It was made by the stepmother of Akbar on getting the services of Persian artist Meeran Mirza Gias. There is an effect of Persian art on it. The art of this building of long necked tomb can be compared with Timur and Bibi Khanam ka Makbara in Samarkand. There is no doubt, the buildings made in Fatehpur Sikri are considered as the best among all the buildings of Mughal period. Historian Smith has written: "As Fatehpur Sikri nothing could be made before it and it is also not possible to be made after it. It is a romance designed on the stones." Akbar also constructed few forts, tombs and fountains etc., on Atak, Medta and Ajmer etc. and other places. The Charbagh is constructed around the tomb. To make beautiful buildings on making the gardens is the main speciality of Mughal architecture skills. That speciality was also used in this tomb. The drains are made for the flow of water from the main room of buildings. There are set of fountains in between it. Roads are made for coming and going in tomb. Among buildings initially constructed by Mughal the tomb of Humayun is the most beautiful. It is also very strong, because of which it is fully secured till yet. Mughal architecture is a unique Indo-Islamic architectural style that flourished in northern and central India from the 16th to the 18th centuries under the patronage of Mughal monarchs. It's a stunningly symmetrical and ornate blend of Persian, Turkish, and Indian architecture.
