About the Ethical Leadership

In modern time's need of hour is value based education. Ethical Leadership is leading by knowing and doing what is right and there are two aspects of Ethical leadership One is that the leader must act and make decisions ethically, and second is that the leader must also lead ethically in their attitudes and interactions.

Ethical leaders distinguish themselves by doing, which is inconvenient, unpopular, and even temporarily unprofitable in the service of long-term health and value. They view the world as interconnected and develop multidisciplinary solutions to address complex problems that emerge every day.

NEED OF ETHICAL LEADERSHIP

The leadership is responsible for influencing followers to perform an action, complete a task, or behave in a specific manner. Effective leaders influence process, stimulate change in subordinate's attitudes and values, augment followers' self-efficacy beliefs, and foster the internalization of the leaders' vision by utilizing strategies of empowerment. It is believed that the nurturing aspect of leaders can raise organizational cultures and employee values to high levels of ethical concern. Ethical leadership requires ethical leaders. If leaders are ethical, they can ensure that ethical practices are carried out throughout the organization.
